10 B-36 Survivors Rescued; Other 7 Alive

Arlingtonian, 16 Crewmen Bailed Out Of Bomber

One Man Who Hung 10 Hours on Cliff Is Reported to Be In Grave Condition

Seattle, Feb. 15 (AP).—Seventeen men who parachuted from a flaming American B-36 bomber have been located alive and 10 of them are being flown to an American airbase, the United States Coast Guard and Canadian navy reported tonight.

Six survivors have been located 3 miles inland on rocky and wooded Princess Royal Island off the British Columbia coast. Another man, in critical condition from injuries sustained in his drop, was being brought to a Coast Guard cutter off the island.

Ten men who were picked up earlier by a fishing boat are en route to McChord Air Force base near Tacoma, Wash. All are reported in good condition except for being tired.

Arlington Man Saved

Among them is Lieut. Col. Samuel J. Macdonald, of Arlington, Va., who was a passenger aboard the plane.

The critically injured man is Sergt. Vitale Trippodi of Brooklyn, N. Y. He was hurt when his foot was caught in the crevice of a cliff as he landed at a point 3 miles inland.

Capt. Vance King, skipper of a rescue vessel, told the Associated Press in a radiotelephone interview that Trippodi was trapped on the cliff more than 10 hours.

The scene of the rescues is the Queen Charlotte Islands group about 400 miles northwest of Vancouver, and 85 miles south of Prince Rupert, B. C.

Capt. H. L. Barry of Hillsboro, Ill., the bomber's pilot, was interviewed aboard the fishboat Cape Perry. He said:

All Very Tired

"We are all in good shape, but very tired. It was the roughest country I've ever seen."

He said he landed in the middle of a lake on nearby Ashdown Island, then rounded up other members of the crew.

"We were over the island group when we bailed out. I was the only one to land in the water.

The men "bailed out" of the burning, ice-crusted bomber late Monday night, clearing the ship in 10 seconds.

The men were drenched in rainstorms while they awaited rescue.

Barry and his group were flown by a Coast Guard PBY to Port Hardy, B. C., where an American C-82 "Flying Boxcar" picked them up and left at 8:15 p. m. (11:15

Trapped Miner Freed, Second Believed Dead

Whitesburg, Ky., Feb. 15 (AP).—Rescuers today freed the first of two men trapped by a rock fall for more than 24 hours in the nearly worked-out Fire Chief coal mine near here.

Worley Dickenson, 59, of Pound, Va., was brought out suffering from exposure and shock. His companion was Dewey Rose, 49.

Chief Mine Inspector A. D. Sisk conferred with rescuers to determine the best method of bringing Rose out. Letcher County Sheriff Hassell Stamper believes Rose is dead.

Dickenson said he hadn't heard anything from Rose since the fall. They were about 20 feet apart when it happened.

Big New Flush-Deck Carrier Planned for Larger Planes

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Navy has arrived at some fairly firm plans to keep its air arm modern and at the same time conform to top Pentagon policy ruling out the so-called "super" aircraft carrier.

Preliminary plans have been completed for a new flush-deck flattop of from 52,000 to 55,000 tons—smaller than the controversial 65,000-ton USS United States, The Washington Post learns.

It is designed to meet the Navy's need for larger, faster and longer-range craft to carry out its primary missions without impinging on the Air Force's strategic bombing mission.

Development of a new Allison "turbo-prop" engine for carrier aircraft also is being strongly pushed, and ranking naval officials are highly optimistic of its success. If so, it may "revolutionize" seaborne aviation, said one, by making possible new types of carrier plane, with performance almost equal to that of jet aircraft and with much greater range.

Folding Tail Assemblies

Also in view are larger planes with folding tail assemblies which would enable them to be stored below decks on existing flattops. This is a significant indication that the Navy now is accommodating itself to the realities of present Pentagon policy, for heretofore top Navy officers refused to admit that the bigger planes of tomorrow could be handled aboard today's carriers.

In still another way is this changed attitude evident. Though the plans for the new flush-deck carrier were far enough complete for its tentative inclusion in the budget for the fiscal year begin-

VFW Warns Defense Chiefs On Economies

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The powerful national legislative committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars yesterday criticized the Nation's military leaders, warning that economy might lead to a defense structure no stronger than "a house of cards when the hour of need arrives."

The committee statement came within 24 hours after Defense Secretary Louis Johnson hit back at critics of his defense economies and termed present forces "sufficient unto the needs of the hour."

The committee also scored the President and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, declaring that their disregard for legislative intent showed "a definite tendency toward the creation of a Prussian-type General Staff which would sound the death knell of our traditional civilian control of our armed services."

The committee chairman, Adrian J. Grobsmith, of Syracuse, N. Y., cited several recent decisions of the defense leaders in demonstrating this trend:

The first was the Marine Corps, which "Congress in 1947 assigned the primary role of amphibious operations. Notwithstanding this announced intention of Congress, the Joint Chiefs of Staff by majority vote ordered Army-Navy-Air Force amphibious operations in the Carribean during 1950, but excluded units of the Fleet Marine Force from active participation therein," Grobsmith said.

Also, "in a parallel action, the Secretary of Defense ordered the budget for the Marine Corps for the fiscal year 1951 to reflect a sharp reduction in the number of battalions in the two remaining Marine divisions and almost a 50 percent reduction in the number

Navy's Non-Flying Aviators Told They've Got to Wear Blue

Naval aviators on duty at the Pentagon and Navy Department have been barred from wearing the green aviation uniform—except while actually flying.

Henceforth, said verbal orders issued yesterday by Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, chief of naval operations, both air and surface officers must appear in the traditional service dress blue garb.

Reason for the instructions, said a naval spokesman, is a desire for "uniformity and smart appearance."

But the real purpose back of the order, officers reasoned, was Sherman's drive to "close the ranks" between aviators and surface ship sailors and more firmly unite the Navy.

Most of those affected who had heard the order last night agreed with this aim, despite much grumbling about the effect on their pocketbooks.

Many naval aviators prefer the green suit which sets them apart from the surface officer and own more of them than they do of "blues." Something of a rush on the local uniform shops is expected "when the word gets around." And the "greens" will have to go into mothballs.

A Navy spokesman who confirmed reports of the action for The Washington Post said there would be no formal orders issued but that they would go into effect "almost immediately," allowing time for "the word to be passed."

The instructions will not apply to officers on duty at the Anacostia naval air station, the Naval Gun Factory, nor other local units, he said. Furthermore, naval aviators on duty at the Pentagon and Department may wear greens to the office "if they so desire" on days they are scheduled to fly.

Soviet-China Treaty Seen As a 'Front'

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Secretary Acheson pictured the new Soviet-Chinese agreement yesterday as a front for secret understandings and as a source of future bickering between the Communist allies.

He described the main treaty text as just a boilerplate copy of treaties with satellite nations of eastern Europe. Clearly, he said, the Chinese delegates did not spend almost nine weeks in Moscow just to draw up that kind of document.

What secret agreements were made, what price the Russians exacted from the Chinese, the Secretary did not try to guess. But he was emphatic in saying that the published texts did not tell the whole story.

Probably all of what was done would not come out in printed form at all, he predicted; it would come out in Soviet actions over months and years.

Importance Lies in Results

The important things in the Soviet-satellite treaties were not what was in them, he said, but what results flowed from them. In the same way the main importance of the treaty with China would not be the phrases in it, but the performance.

The Secretary disclosed that the State Department had been getting reports of bad crop conditions and near-famine in many parts of Communist China, even in areas that used to be considerable food producers.

In view of these reports, he said the 300 million dollars of Soviet aid to China over five years was surprisingly meager; a nation on the verge of famine would not get very far with help on such a scale, especially on Soviet valuations.

He went on to say that any economic agreements with the Soviet Union were only starting-points leading to bickering and trouble. At any rate, he knew of no nation making a treaty with the Soviet Union since the war which could regard that treaty as a happy relationship for itself.

The Secretary was skeptical about the Moscow statement that both partners were eager for agreement on a Japanese peace treaty. Soviet eagerness, he said, had not been demonstrated in any impressive way in recent weeks; it had been impossible even to agree on the procedure for writing a Japanese treaty.

Likewise he was not impressed by the Soviet promise to return Port Arthur and the Manchurian railway to Chinese control by 1952, or when a Japanese treaty had been signed. He said he could not tell why 1952 had been chosen as the date, except that it would put off Soviet evacuation of the Port Arthur naval base.

A reporter asked about Ambassador Philip C. Jessup's statement in Bangkok, Siam, that the United States would look "with sympathy"

Crime Parley Gets Federal Go Slow Sign

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Attorney General's one-day crime conference meeting here yesterday laid the groundwork for a drive for new Federal legislation to smash the tygoons, the leaders of the big interstate gambling syndicates.

But the conference of mayors and city and State attorneys got the "go slow" signal from the Justice Department, and the result was disappointment to many of the delegates, who had expected much stronger action.

The conference set up committees to which a batch of anti-racket resolutions was referred for study. Two most important proposed bans on slot machine transportation across State lines and use of telephones, telegraph and radio for transmitting horserace betting information.

Others suggested fingerprinting applicants for Social Security cards, throwing open to local officials Social Security and income tax information on police characters and known criminals, and registration of owners as well as licensees of those paying Federal taxes on gambling devices.

No Proposals Indorsed

But the conference failed to indorse any specific proposal or even the pending Kefauver resolution calling for a $100,000 full-scale Senate investigation of the interstate rackets.

The Washington Post was told that the resolutions committee was "talked out" of such an indorsement by Peyton Ford, assistant to Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, on grounds that no specific legislation should be approved.

There was little doubt, however, that practically all the delegates were behind the investigation idea. Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.) sat in on the meeting most of the day, and told reporters aft-

Lights Stop Truman; He's Law-Abiding Man

President Truman told some of the Nation's law-enforcement officers yesterday that he was a law-abiding man.

Reporters who traveled behind the President on his way to the Department of Justice Building for his address noticed that his new Lincoln stopped for all red lights.

House Fiddles With Roll Calls While District Bills Languish

(Committee showdown on FEPC due today, Page 9)

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The House voted unanimously yesterday to incorporate the Girl Scouts of America.

But it took the harrassed Congressmen nearly four hours to even get close to this sole legislative action of the day.

Specifically, the buildup for the Girl Scout victory involved:

A near-record eight rollcalls, each gobbling up about 30 minutes to record;

A repeated parliamentary maneuver—motions "to dispense with further proceedings"—which if carried, would have sent the House sergeant-at-arms on the hunt for all absent members;

A quickie speech by Representative Louis C. Rabaut (D., Mich.) against "galloping" husbands who desert their families;

An appeal by Representative Ed Gossett (D., Tex.) for a national boycott against the Bergman-Rossellini film, "Stromboli," and others just as far afield.

It all came about because yesterday was the District Committee's turn to call up any and all legislation ready for floor action under the call-of-committees procedure.

So, Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), after his Southern Democratic friends had exhausted every delaying tactic in the House book, trotted out the Girl Scout measure.

The gimmick behind the House's ding-dong-daddy performance was a move by FEPC foes to delay at least until next Wednesday consideration of that controversial civil rights legislation.

The House Labor and Education Committee is next in line to be recognized, presumably next Wednesday, and Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) has served notice he will then ask consideration of FEPC legislation. The fair employment practices bill is presently bottled up in the Rules Committee.

The Southern Democrats' use of District measures to delay FEPC action stirred new agitation for prompt action on the Senate-approved local home-rule measure.

Between roll calls yesterday several members signed the petition to bring home rule to a House vote. Last night there were 153 signers on the petition, or about three-quarters of the necessary 218 signatures to force the measure to a House showdown.

One of yesterday's signers, Mike Monroney (D., Okla.), commented: "Congress simply hasn't the time to spare looking after the sale of rockfish or other such issues."

Another new signer was freshman Representative William B. Widnall (R., N. J.), who said signing the petition was his "first act" of his "first day" in Congress. "I have heard a lot about the disenfranchisement of Washington residents," he said, "and I think it is a perfectly ridiculous and most un-American situation."

Chairman McMillan entered the House yesterday after the noon prayer, armed with seven District bills, including one to authorize the District Commissioners to contract for the disposal of sludge.

Coal Down to 28-Day Supply So School Heat Is Cut to 68

By Richard L. Lyons
Post Reporter

All coal-using District agencies, including schools, yesterday were ordered to keep temperatures down to 68 degrees to conserve soft-coal supplies.

Supt. Hobart M. Corning told the Board of Education 150 school buildings had been ordered to hold temperatures to this maximum. The Recreation Department has also ordered a cutting down of night-time activities, he told the board.

The schools have only a seven-day supply of coal, Corning reported. But District purchasing officer Roland M. Brennan said there is no immediate threat of a school holiday. Federal Supply Service, which furnishes coal to all District buildings, has a 21-day supply, he said.

School board member Adelbert W. Lee suggested that since schools will close next Wednesday for Washington's Birthday, they remain closed on Thursday and Friday. The board took no action on the suggestion.

A similar order to keep temperatures down to 68 degrees, except where doctors order otherwise, was sent to all other District agencies. It was issued by Brennan and District maintenance engineer Robert E. Robson after approval by the Commissioners.

It also ordered that: heat be reduced in buildings or parts of buildings not in use for four or more hours; unnecessary use of

Negro Members Protest Delay

School Board Defers Action On Transfer of Central High

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

A decision on the proposed transfer of Central High School to use by Negro students was postponed again yesterday by the Board of Education, this time to March 8.

The delay came after the board's buildings and grounds committee, which already has approved the transfer, refused to submit its report.

A majority of the committee voted that additional time is needed to study the effect of the transfer on the city's recreational program.

The committee also asked for time to consider a proposal presented by board member Albert E. Steinem that the white Eliot Junior High School, 18th and B sts. ne., be used temporarily to house Negro high school students until completion in two years of the new Spingarn High School.

Negro board members vigorously protested the delay and Dr. Philip Johnson, one of the Negro members, charged that Steinem had not acted in good faith.

To Decide March 8

Committee members agreed to the March 8 deadline for their report and the full board voted to finally settle the question of finding relief for the overcrowded Negro Cardozo High School on that date.

The board's hearing room was jammed again for yesterday's meeting at which the board previously had said it would reach a decision. The hearings held by the board on the controversial issue of transferring Central have drawn increasingly larger crowds. Interested spectators yesterday stood in

Fuelless Process Makes Fine Steel In Only 12 Minutes

New York, Feb. 15 (AP).—A new process makes high-quality steel in 12 minutes, without using fuel, two scientists reported today.

The steel is equal in quality to open-hearth steel, they said. It takes eight to 12 hours to make a batch of open-hearth steel, cooking it in a fire of fuel oil, or some form of gas.

The new method is called the turbo-hearth, shaped like a giant steel coffee-maker. Molten pig iron from the blast furnace is poured in. Blasts of air are shot in from the side, to blow over the molten iron. The pig iron cooks itself to become steel. Carbon and other impurities in the pig iron supply the heat as they burn or oxidize in the air stream.

The turbo hearth was described by C. E. Sims, of Batelle Memorial Institute, Columbus, Ohio, and F. L. Toy of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp.

Truman Plans To Stump for Party Slates

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

President Truman, who plans to take the stump for Democratic candidates for Congress this fall, will lay down the pattern for his party's 1950 campaign tonight.

He will speak at the annual $100-a-plate Jefferson-Jackson dinner in the National Guard Armory. More than 5300 men and women will assemble at tables forming a gigantic fan on the armory's drill floor, with Mr. Truman at its apex. The Democratic National Committee is billing the dinner as "the largest ever held under one roof."

The President's deep interest in seeing his party retain control of Congress this year was indicated yesterday by a White House caller—Edward Lamb, publisher of the Erie, Pa., Dispatch-Herald.

Lamb, who called on Mr. Truman with Mayor David Lawrence of Pittsburgh, quoted the President as saying that, after the Democratic nominees are chosen, he would wage an aggressive campaign on their behalf in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

"He said," declared Lamb, "that he would wage as aggressive a fight to elect a Democratic Congress this fall as he waged to get himself elected in 1948."

"He said he would lay out the Democratic platform Thursday night."

William M. (Bill) Boyle, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, called on President Truman later in the day. He said that Mr. Truman was "vitally interested" in the 1950 elections, and added that the national committee was anxious to have him appear in States with close contests.

Boyle told reporters that the Democratic Party was in "better

All U. S. Oak Trees Threatened By Fungus Spreading East

Philadelphia, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—The country's oak trees are being attacked by a killing fungus and so far no defense has been found, a scientist said today.

The blight, apparently moving east with the prevailing winds, already is deeply entrenched in the Middle West, Dr. Wendell H. Camp said.

He said that the blight appears to be spreading at a rate of 50 miles a year and that "it is a physical impossibility to stop it."

I have heard a lot about the disenfranchisement of Washington residents," he said, "and I think it is a perfectly ridiculous and most un-American situation."

Camp, curator of experimental botany at the Academy of Natural Sciences here and president of the American Horticultural Council, said about the only hope for the Nation's most important hardwood forest tree was that the disease would recognize a climatic barrier.

However, he said the possibility was slight. The fungus has struck as far east as Gary, Ind., 800 miles from the East Coast, and as far south as Paducah, Ky.

"Since it appears to be dispersed by minute, wind-blown spores, the prevailing winds are almost certain to introduce it further eastward and then southward," he said. "Control by destruction of the infected trees now appears to be impossible."

Camp said the spread of the blight could shake the Nation's economy. The oak is the main "building wood," he said. America's railroads run for the most part on oak ties.

"The real tragedy would come if it spreads into Mexico where the oak is the sole source of fuel," he added.

If other shrubs and trees could not be moved in fast enough to cover oak-stripped areas, the resultant erosion would choke rivers and fill reservoirs with silt, rendering them useless for man's use. Flash floods would be common.

Coal Peace Prospects Held Bleak After Talks

'No Progress,' Cole Says; Lewis Silent; Cole of Inquiry Unit Is Mildly Optimistic

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The outlook for an early peace in the coal dispute appeared last night to be as bleak as the Nation's empty coal bins.

For the third consecutive day, 37,000 soft coal miners defied a Federal Court antistrike injunction and stayed away from the coal pits. In some of the coal States, "flying squads" of strikers picketed and shut down mines still in operation, among them mines which have signed a new contract with the United Mine Workers on John L. Lewis' terms.

In Washington, a day-long negotiations session between Lewis and the coal operators—conducted at the direct orders of the Federal Court—ended yesterday evening on a cheerless note.

"We made no progress toward settling the chaos in this industry, in my view," commented George Love, spokesman for the Northern-Western producers, as he stepped out of the conference room at the Hotel Statler.

One Note of Optimism

Love added that he "didn't see much change in the atmosphere" of the collective bargaining—an atmosphere that has resulted in eight months of arguments and debate but with no progress at all in the settlement of a new work contract.

Lewis had no comment.

Lone source of any optimism so far as the resumed negotiations are concerned was David L. Cole, chairman of the President's special board of inquiry, who participated in the meeting as an observer.

"Some necessary conversations took place," Cole said.

The operators and Lewis will meet again this morning at 10 o'clock at the Statler and continue their bargaining. Only on that point was there agreement—and on that point the negotiators are conforming with a court injunction to keep on bargaining.

Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, who initiated the peace moves in the month-long steel strike last year, will sit in on today's negotiating sessions along with Fact-Finder Cole.

Snarl Over Procedure

Yesterday's bargaining conference began at 11 a. m. and almost immediately became snarled over the matter of procedure. The Southern Coal Producers Association, which has been conducting separate negotiations with the UMW, asked that the same procedure be followed in carrying out the Federal Court's order to coal

$44.5 Million Asked To Test AA Weapon

By The Associated Press

The Army has asked for $44,518,500 to continue tests of the "Skysweeper," a top-secret anti-aircraft gun that it says can hit planes of supersonic speed either night or day.

Secretary of the Army Gray described the weapon as "our best answer to date for the threat posed by aircraft at short and medium ranges."

These disclosures were part of a report, made public yesterday, of hearings before a House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, on the Army's request for $4,018,384,000 the Defense Department has asked for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Range and firing speed of the 75-millimeter Skysweeper were not revealed. Its primary new features are said to be radar-directed fire control and proximity-fuzed ammunition.

Gray also told the House group that the Army's research experts are completing development of "extremely accurate fire control systems for detecting and engaging high-altitude targets traveling at near-sonic speeds."

Details of this system, known as "antiaircraft T-33," are closely guarded secrets. The Army wants $23,779,339 to be used in its development.

Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, told the committee that the Army is making some reductions in manpower while spending more money on some weapons.

Gray said that the Army is placing emphasis on tanks, their guns and ammunition, antiaircraft missiles and guns, surface-to-surface guided missiles and medical research in preventive psychiatry, radiation injury and preventive medicine.

General Collins said the action taken by the Army last year in initiating a program for the expansion of antiaircraft units was evidence of a new trend stemming from the knowledge that other countries were working on atomic weapons.

The Army asked $63,1[illegible],000 for tanks and combat vehicles, twice the sum appropriated last year. Of the total, 45 million dollars would go into light tanks.

Meanwhile it was learned that wartime 46-ton Pershing tanks are being converted into the more powerful Patton tank.

The Army asked 36 million dollars for ammunition. This includes six million dollars for guided missles, an increase of $3,500,000 above last year's estimate.

The report also disclosed that United States military planners are taking quite seriously the possibility that if there is a "hot war," fighting will take place where it is bitterly cold.

They are anticipating what can be done in event there are major clashes with Russia in the Arctic regions.

The Army Quartermaster Department is seeking $8,258,000 for research and development alone. The requests are studded with research projects on how to enable the soldier to live and fight in the Arctic.

The Army wants to spend $48,000 in developing lightweight, highly resilient and durable filling material for padded Arctic clothing.

Col. Jack Finks of the Army Quartermaster General's office told the subcommittee that chemists are trying to develop a way to heat clothing artificially. Army has found it can store cooked bread two years in the Arctic.

State Dept. Hits Atlantic Union Pleas

By The Associated Press

The State Department does not want Congress to act now on proposals looking toward an Atlantic union or a world federation.

Deputy Undersecretary of State Dean Rusk and Assistant Undersecretary John D. Hickerson made that clear in appearing before the Senate Foreigns Relations Committee yesterday.

Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.), chief sponsor of the Atlantic Union resolution, accused the State Department of a "lack of imagination" in its opposition to the union proposal. Kefauver is not a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

"I'm disappointed in the attitude and lack of imagination of the State Department," Kefauver told Rusk and Hendrickson. "I think the State Department is assuming the prerogative of speaking for the American people. If we had had this attitude before 1787, we never would have had a Federal union."

"Opposing Each Proposal"

Kefauver said the State Department doesn't realize that the people are getting tired of paying for the cold war with no progress toward a solution.

"You should be seeking a policy which would get us off this plateau instead of opposing each proposal that is made," Kefauver said.

Rusk retorted that the State Department opposes the idea of the Government sending out an invitation to a limited number of nations to attend a union convention.

He said the union advocates are interested in a political commitment by the American government.

"Why not call the convention on a private basis instead of a Government basis?" Rusk asked. "You can do that if study is all you want."

Rusk said the department favors a stronger United Nations that would include Russia—"but we don't favor calling a convention at this time."

Amendments Studied

He said the department right now is studying suggested amendments to the U. N. charter, designed to strengthen the organization.

Hickerson questioned whether the American people are ready to take part in a union scheme that he said would entail abandonment of national control over foreign policy, armed forces, imports, currency, immigration and taxation.

Such a union might bring weakness instead of strength, Hickerson said.

With Russia, as usual, in the forefront of all considerations of national and international security, Rusk gave renewed assurance that "the door to negotiation is always open on our side."

He pointed out that matters at issue between the Soviet Union and the United States could be properly discussed through the United Nations—"the house of a thousand doors"—or through the ordinary channels of diplomacy.

United States "Not Willing"

He said, however, that the United States is not willing to "sit down in a corner with another great power" and try to reach decisions that affect the basic interests of other governments or peoples.

The Senate committee has before it a number of resolutions aimed at providing some form of international machinery to keep world peace. One of the proposals calls upon the President to summon a convention of Atlantic powers to consider the possibility of a union; another calls for a world federation as the main objective of United States foreign policy.

Rusk advocated the greatest caution against injuring the present United Nations organization, which he said is capable of accomplishing much good.

He said:

"It would be disastrous if by turning in any irresponsible or whimsical fashion to new forms of organizations or glittering formulae for perfection, we were to set ourselves back. . . .

"We should do irreparable harm if we should come forward with bold proposals of radically new international organizations without satisfactory answers to some very fundamental questions."

Hungary Blasted for Barring U. S. Lawyer at Vogeler Trial

The State Department angrily denounced Hungary yesterday for refusing to let an American lawyer defend Robert A. Vogeler, New York business executive who goes on trial in Budapest Friday on charges of espionage and sabotage.

The department said the refusal, which it disclosed in publishing an exchange of notes with Hungary, makes it extremely doubtful Vogeler will get a fair trial. It warned the Communist-dominated Hungarian government it has an "obligation before the world" to protect his rights.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson told a news conference he "cannot emphasize too strongly the seriousness with which we view the Hungarian government's behavior in this affair." He expressed the "earnest hope" that Hungary will change its mind.

Vogeler, an assistant vice-president to the International Telephone and Telegraph Co., was arrested November 19 and has been held incommunicado since. Officials of the U. S. Legation have not been permitted to visit him.

Up to 30,000 DPs Reported To Be of Doubtful Eligibility

By The Associated Press

A veteran Immigration Service officer estimated yesterday that possibly as many as 30,000 displaced persons admitted to this country were of doubtful eligibility.

Almanza Tripp, head of an immigration service mission assigned to Europe to check on DPs entering the United States under a 1948 law, testified at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing.

Demands for deportation of displaced persons who have used faked documents to get into this country have arisen in a swirling controversy over the refuge program.

Tripp, an employe of the Immigration and Naturalization Service for 23 years, said he had examined "hundreds, even thousands" of cases where the eligibility of DP applicants looked doubtful.

He testified that the number of these doubtful cases, out of a total of about 135,000 DPs already admitted, "might run as high as 30,000."

Tripp also testified that a fingerprint check at the provost marshal's office of DPs who had been passed by the DP commission and sent to the Bremen camp revealed 96 persons who had been convicted of crime. Of those 96, he said, 33 already had sailed for the United States.

Right now, Tripp said, he has pending a case of an applicant who was certified as eligible by the DP commission but who, immigration officers have discovered, killed a Pole and a Russian consular officer in Poland in 1927.

The man served 10 years in prison and then was released, Tripp said. He testified that the DP commission did not know of his murder conviction at the time it passed him for admission to the United States.

The demand for DP deportation of those who got in illegally came in the midst of testimony on sex, fraud and bribery angles of the refugee program.

"I am all for deporting these people who have entered illegally," Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) told reporters. Senator Graham (D., N. C.) indicated he shared the same view.

Watson Miller, commissioner of immigration and naturalization, told the committee that within the last 10 days he had received notice of 76 cases involving false papers, including those of 54 persons already in this country.

Donald W. Main, senior officer in the displaced persons commission office in Munich, on Tuesday cited allegations that a Negro employe in the Frankfurt office of the commission "blackmailed" women DP's to have sexual relations wth him.

Main said he had received reports that an Armenian assistant women DP's that he was quite to the DP employe would tell sure their applications could be straightened out if they would "cooperate."

Senator Donnell (R., Mo.) asked what was meant by "cooperate."

Main answered that the evidence was that the DP employe and the Armenian were "soliciting payments of money and gifts and also improper sexual relations."

No Gobbledygook

British Give ECA Book on Good English

Patient, polite and long-suffering, British Marshall Plan officials reached the cracking point this week.

Still polite and nothing if not subtle, they nevertheless let it be known that there ought to be a limit to the crimes committed in the name of the English language. And of these crimes, they hinted, surely the most heinous are those perpetrated in Government writing.

Bissell

Their ever-so-gentle way of making the point was through the presentation to the Economic Cooperation Administration of 200 copies of a book written for the benefit of their own practitioners of gobbledeygook, the bureaucrats of the British Treasury.

Advice 200 Years Old

The book, "Plain Words: A Guide to the Use of English," contains a pointed admonition more than 200 years old. The quote is from a letter of the Secretary of the Commissioners of Excise to the Supervisors of Pontefract. It reads:

The Commissioners on perusal of your Diary observe that you make use of many affected phrases, and incongrous words, such as 'illegal procedure,' 'harmony,' etc., all of which you use in a sense that the words do not bear. I am ordered to acquaint you that if you hereafter continue that affected and schoolboy way of writing, and to murder the language in such a manner, you will be discharged for a fool."

The presentation was made by Sir Edmund Hall-Patch, a long-time career diplomat. He is head of the British delegation to the Marshall Plan countries' central organization, and chairman of its executive committee. He is now in Washington with a group from that body.

Appearance Belies Humor

Sir Edmund's appearance, with ascot tie and tight-pressed lips, belies his possession of a vein of wry and salty humor. His remarks on presenting the guides to decent usage of the language are, unfortunately, not recorded.

In behalf of the recipients, Richard M. Bissell, jr., assistant administrator of the ECA, could only agree that the charge, however velled, was accurate. In a memorandum to ECA officials receiving the book, Bissell wrote:

"If we should be able to reintroduce the English language into all our written papers in place of the dialect that has become common in Government, our place in history would be assured. By this act we would reverse an historic trend . . . as malign, in its small way, as the spread of communism.

"Surely there could be no greater triumph for the members of an organization that deals with foreign policy than to be able to say what they mean clearly and correctly. We can only hope that if we revive this dying skill, the occupational disease of caution will not prevent us from using it."

U. S.-British Tension Mounting

In recent weeks, there has been mounting disagreement and tension between United States and British officials in the Marshall Plan. Bissell seemed to be taking note of it in another paper he wrote, a letter of thanks for the books to Sir Edmund. He said:

"If our two Governments could be induced to use the English language again, I have every confidence that we might each understand the other a great deal better than we do.

"May I take the liberty of sending you a book in return? Its subject is similar and, though its contents are less distinguished . . . I cannot help feeling that there is nevertheless something peculiarly appropriate for all of us in its title."

The book, an American counterpart to the British guide, is "The Art of Plain Speaking."

Joan 'Internationalist' Since 5, Wants to Return to Germany

Since the tender age of 5, said Joan Cecile von Goetz yesterday, Joan Cecile von Goetz has been an "internationalist."

She's worked for the Irish, Spanish, Iranian, Egyptian, and Turkish embassies and legations in Washington; the British and Swiss government in Switzerland, and the American Government in Germany.

So what, asked Joan Cecile, is so awfully strange, so awfully "sensational" about an internationalist of 20 years' standing wanting to live in Europe? Or, most particularly, in Germany? Joan was deported from Germany for overstaying her residence permit. She arrived back in Washington Tuesday.

She said she is going back—even if she has to relinquish her citizenship and get redeported.

In a dramatic voice, with an accent that could be German or British or international, Cecile declared yesterday that she "must return."

"My future lies there."

And Cecile's mother, slight and greying Mrs. Jean von Goetz, of 1509 Spring pl. nw., promised to go down to the State Department soon to see to it that her girl goes where she wants.

Court Will Study Move to Dismiss Slaughter Charge

Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut yesterday took under advisement a defense motion to dismiss the Government's lobbying indictment against former Representative Roger Slaughter (D., Mo.).

Slaughter was indicted in November, 1948, on charges he failed to register as a lobbyist for the North American Grain Association, Inc., and board of trades in Kansas City, Chicago and Minneapolis.

William E. Leary, attorney for Slaughter, said the Justice Department has no legal evidence to support its case. He accused the Government of trying to restrict Slaughter's "right as an attorney" to choose his clients.

Arms Smuggling Laid to Yanks

By the United Press

Leonard H. Pomeroy, a State Department official, yesterday accused "certain American adventurers" of playing a key role in a wide-spead arms smuggling racket in politically disturbed southeast Asia.

Pomeroy, who works in the department's munitions control division, included the accusations in an article in the "Department of State Bulletin." Some of the arms, he said, were stolen from United States military surplus dumps in the Philippines.

Others came from abandoned Japanese military dumps. They allegedly were smuggled to warring factions in Indonesia, Burma, Indochina and Thailand. Pomeroy said some military surplus transferred to the Philippine government also was involved.

"It was found that dishonesty on the part of separated United States personnel and outside thefts accounted for most of the reported losses of war materiels," he asserted.

The Army has admitted that valuable war surplus has disappeared from Pacific Islands after United States troops were withdrawn. But it insists war surplus was properly disposed of in all areas where troops remained on occupation duty.

Pomeroy named no names. But he said that in instances where the arms "leaks" were traced to Philippines munitions dumps, the United States has "requested that appropriate steps be taken, if possible to prevent future leakage."

Czechs Plan to Combine Banks

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Feb. 15 (U.P.). — The official Czech news agency announced today the government will combine all banks except one into a single state bank with a capital of three billion crowns (60 million dollars).

The new bank will take over the functions of four government-owned institutions, including the national bank and the Zivnostenska bank which handled foreign trade. The investment bank will continue to function separately, to grant long-term loans.

The announcement said the state bank would prepare a financial plan for Czechoslovakia, issue bank notes and direct the circulation of currency, as well as "carry out and control" payments in connection with foreign currency deals. The bank's profits will go to the state treasury.

Meanwhile a Communist newspaper reported the government had installed its own administrator in a Slovakian Catholic diocese because church officials had broken a state law. The publication Pravda at Bratislava said Dean Jan Dechet had been named administrator of the Banska Bystrica diocese to succeed the Rev. R. Andrej Skrabik, who died January 9.

Flood Threat Grows; 17 Die In Icy Storms

By The Associated Press

The bloated Mississippi swelled up almost to its brim along a 600-mile stretch from Cairo, Ill., to the Gulf Wednesday. Engineers said more rain could send it on its most destructive orgy in 23 years.

The biggest storm of the winter continued without letup in New England. Road conditons were hazardous and many schools closed.

Sleet and snow storms in the Midwest and East were blamed for at least 17 deaths in 48 hours—mostly from overexertion in snow or traffic mishaps.

Several Mississippi River tributaries already are running wild.

Some 650,000 acres of east central Louisiana lowlands have been flooded by backwaters that drove 1400 families from their homes.

Other lowland residents have fled to higher ground in southeast Missouri where flooded conditions along the St. Francis River were serious.

Kaywood Gardens Apartments Seek Rent Increases

The management of Kaywood Gardens Apartments in Mount Rainier, Md., is seeking rent increases for 387 of the development's 915 units.

The management's petition, which did not specify the amount of increase sought, was filed with the Rent Control Office in Silver Spring.

According to Albert J. Knott, general manager of Kaywood Gardens, rent increases have never been established for the 387 units.

Present rentals, he said, range from $49.50 a month for efficiency apartments to $75 for two bedroom apartments.

'Stunt,' Says Bevin Of Churchill Speech

By Ned Russell

London, Feb. 15 (NYHT).—Prime Minister Clement Attlee and Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin struck back at Winston Churchill tonight for the Conservative leader's criticisms of the Labor government's attitude toward the problem of atomic and hydrogen bombs.

In an election broadcast, Bevin indirectly described Churchill's proposal for a Big Three conference on the whole atomic energy problem as a political stunt.

But he was more cautious in his remarks than Attlee, who denounced Churchill for complaining that Britain had failed to make atomic bombs of her own.

The Prime Minister, speaking to a rally at Nottingham, indicated that Churchill, when he was Prime Minister during the war, had made an agreement with the United States exempting Britain from any responsibility for manufacturing atomic bombs.

"Mr. Churchill made the agreement with the United States and knows perfectly well that atomic weapons should be developed in America and Canada," Attlee said.

Bevin did not mention Churchill by name or refer directly to his proposal last night for a meeting of President Truman, Premier Stalin and the next British prime minister to discuss international control of atomic energy.

But he said: "This is not a problem which can be solved by any stunt proposals."

At the same time, Bevin recalled how both he and Attlee had worked with the United States in an effort to secure international control over atomic energy development but had been thwarted by Russia.

"Russia is a closed book," the Foreign Secretary said, "and at present her people are being cut off more than ever, but if peace is her objective, as it is ours, inspection and control of atomic energy is not too great a price to pay."

Bevin echoed Attlee's remarks made earlier today that the atomic energy problem remains a matter for the United Nations. Bevin said he would continue to seek international agreement through the Atomic Energy Committee of the U. N.

He emphasized, however, that the British government is in constant touch with the United States on the atomic problem. But because of the United States' "very heavy responsibilities" Britain cannot act alone.

He pointed out that the United States' attitude was "clearly" expressed by Secretary of State Acheson a week ago. Acheson then ruled out any new approach to Moscow on grounds that efforts made during the past four years to reach agreement with Russia on the atomic problem had shown that "it is not possible."

[On Churchill's proposal of Tuesday Acheson smilingly declined comment. The Secretary told his Wednesday press conference that to comment on the speech would require more daring than he possessed. He thought he would not comment on any speeches coming out of the United Kingdom until after the February 23 election—Editor's note.]

In an interview during his campaign tour today, Atlee said the question of another approach to Russia was "a matter for consideration."

"I don't rule out the suggestion made by Mr. Churchill," he said, "but at the present moment, it rests with the United Nations."

Greater Puzzle

Redistricting Gives Britain 'Fairer' Poll

This is the second article in a series of special daily pieces dealing with the British election.

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

London, Feb. 15.—Whatever the political color of the new government chosen by the British electorate on February 23, it will probably come closer to representing the preference of the majority than most governments since 1295 and the Model Parliament of Edward I.

This will be due to the recent redrafting of the political map of Britain by His Majesty's Boundary Commission, which cut the number of parliamentary constituencies, or electoral districts, from 640 to 625 and altered the boundaries of all but about 70 of the remaining districts in an effort to obtain a more equitable distribution of seats in proportion to population.

Boroughs with as few as 20,000 voters came to have equal representation in Parliament with communities having 40,000 electors or more. There were other inequities. The universities—Oxford, Cambridge and others—were permitted to elect members to Commons regardless of their relatively small populations. A dual-voting system, furthermore, permitted a business man to vote in the place where he worked and again in the community in which he lived.

The Boundary Commission abolished the 12 university seats and 3 others and eliminated the dual voting. It also redistributed parliamentary seats on a population basis so that roughly every 60,000 electors should have one representative in Parliament.

Politics Scrambled

On election eve, it is evident to everyone concerned—party leaders, candidates and election agents—that His Majesty's cartographers have thoroughly scrambled the jigsaw of British politics.

What were Labor constituencies may have been converted into Tory districts by the addition or subtraction of "foreign" social and economic bits and pieces. And vice versa.

It is generally agreed, however, that Labor will automatically lose about 30 sets through redistribution, while the Tories can at most lose three.

To the ward heelers and campaign managers of all parties, redistribution presents new technical problems that they might not be able to overcome in the few days remaining before poll time.

For one thing, they have more territory to cover in many cases. The addition of a residential distrist containing only 1000 voters, in some instances, means bout 50 additional square miles of territory to canvass and organize.

Rebel Plot Is Frustrated In Indonesia

Jakarta, Indonesia, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—President Soekarno opened the first free Parliament session today by announcing the frustration of a daring rebel plot to attack the Parliament Building.

A planned attack by the bold Moslem rebels under Dutch turncoat Capt. Paul (Turk) Westerling was thwarted only because government agents captured a group of his men with full details of the plot, Soekarno said.

It was learned that military intelligence agents discovered the plot only 24 hours before the time set for today's historic session.

The government surrounded the Parliament Building with a veritable army. For blocks around strong troop cordons barred entry to any but authorized persons.

The president added that Westerling's forces had infiltrated deeply into some areas of the country. The insurgents last month seized control of Bandoeng for several hours, and a few days later clashed with Republican troops in Jakarta itself.

Soekarno told Parliament the government budget probably would show a 2,650,000 guilders (about $5,300,000) deficit this year. He added, however, that he believed Indonesia could recover economic stability in five years if major loans could be negotiated with the United States and the Netherlands.

Finn Electors Pick Paasikivi As President

Helsinki, Feb. 15 (AP). — Juno Paasikivi, a conservative banker who has drawn the fire of Soviet and Finnish Communists, was re-elected President of Finland today for a six-year term. He is 79.

Paasikivi received the votes of 171 of the 300 electors chosen in a popular election January 16 and 17. Mauno Pekkala, former premier and candidate of the Communist-dominated Popular Democrats received 67, and Agrarian Urho Kekkonen 62.

The president, who has negotiated peace with Russia three times, was supported by the Conservative, Progressive, Swedish Peoples and Social Democrat electors.

The question in Finnish political circles was whether Paasikivi's election would further antagonize Russia. A Finnish trade delegation has been kept waiting in Moscow for three months for negotiations that never started. Soviet diplomats today boycotted the formal meeting of the electors.

Russia Steps Up Her Blockade, Restricts Berlin Canal Route

Berlin, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—Russia stepped up her "baby blockade" today, clamping new restrictions on canal traffic into Berlin and delaying a United States Army passenger train for more than two hours.

Soviet officials also continued to limit German truck traffic from the West, although icy highways greatly reduced the number of vehicles awaiting clearance at the Helmstedt check point.

A United States High Commission spokesman said the train, en route from Frankfurt to Berlin, was halted at Marienborn, on the British-Soviet border, because the Russians objected to the presence of two Swiss members of the International Red Cross aboard.

United States officials said the Russians contended the two Swiss were not entitled to travel on a military train. The train was allowed to proceed, however, with the two still aboard, at 1 a. m.

The canal traffic restriction involved the passage of German barges through Soviet-controlled canal locks in the west sectors of Berlin.

British transport officials said the Russians had announced such barges would need new passes issued by the Soviet-controlled East German Waterways Administration.

Imbibing of Fat Toy Brings Chinese Boy Good Luck for Year of Tiger Beginning Friday

CHINESE NEW YEAR CARD—Fifteen-year-old Mabel Kwok of 1011 L st. nw., prepares for the Chinese New Year celebration to be held at the Chinese Church Friday. She is going to hang this silk print which shows ancient Chinese beating drums and horns and lighting firecrackers. The new year will be the Year of the Tiger

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Today is Chinese New Year's Eve and there was much preparation in the local community yesterday, getting ready to Fat Toy out the Year of the Ox and Joo Juk in the Year of the Tiger.

All babies born the year beginning Friday are supposed to have great strength, in the maner of the honorable tiger.

Much imbibing of Fat Toy and Joo Juk brings good luck for the big new year. They are soups.

Maybe Stir Tea Leaves

Soup's but one excellent way to bring in Tiger New Year. On H street, in D. C.'s Chinatown, there'll be late hours tonight, maybe stirring of tea leaves, maybe stirring of something more. Maybe even good lusty firecracker, way of mysterious unfathomable Orient.

"Nothing loud, though," said George Moy, with loud long giggle; Moy who is secretary of the On Leong Merchants Association. "Young Chinese not like old Chinese. Young Chinese not celebrate the old ways so much."

Practical-minded, the Chinese are saving their big celebration for Sunday, Western holiday. H st. between 6th and 7th nw., will see parade between 2 and 5 p. m. so vowed Moy, with dragon weaving down the street, and human beings dancing on pavement.

Tragic Year, As Usual

Then later all Chinese over 70 will be guests of Lee Jung Won at the Cathay Restaurant.

This will be year 39 since Sun Yat-sen established the new Chinese republic. The year begins always on the date of the second new moon after Gwa Oong, winter solstice.

At the Chinese Community Church, an interdenominational Christian church at 1011 L st. nw., the Rev. C. C. Hung, pastor, said the young people will have a New Year's Day party, with dancing and a magician.

Having told this, he philosophized a bit about the waning Year of the Ox, which has seen such hard and bitter events in the ancestral land.

"The Chinese here don't let themselves get too upset," he said, yet great was the sadness in his voice. "They say, what's the use?"

For, it was mentioned, there has scarcely been a year in memory when there was not tragedy in China. War and revolution . . . A steady Chinese diet, while Fat Toy and Joo Juk come but once a year.

Russian-Chinese Pact Seen Leading to Future Bickering

on proposals for a Pacific Pact along the lines of the North Atlantic treaty. Was this, he asked, a change of American policy?

Must Be of Asian Origin

No, the Secretary answered; the American view was that any sort of Pacific union must be spontaneously and truly of Asian origin. If the nations of Asia chose to get together in any field, political, economic or cultural, the Secretary said, the United States would look upon their move with sympathetic interest.

He said this answer had been given to President Quirino of the Philippines, who had discussed a Pacific pact during his recent visit to Washington.

The "Voice of America" broadcasts to Russia and the Far East yesterday sought to counteract the idea that the new Moscow treaty was a diplomatic triumph for Communist China.

For several days the broadcasts have been stressing the length of time the Chinese leaders have been in Moscow, and have suggested that the Chinese were having a difficult time.

Yesterday morning a commentary in Cantonese and Mandarin Chinese stressed the Soviet record of treaty violations. Later commentaries took the same "line" Acheson followed at his press conference, and emphasized the inadequacy of the 300 million dollars of Soviet aid toward meeting China's economic problems.

Asia Strengthening Decided

Bangkok, Thailand, Feb. 15 (AP). United States diplomats ended their Far East conference today and competent sources said they agreed on strengthening southeast Asia against communism.

While policy must be decided in Washington, sources said the following main points were agreed on:

1. The United States is prepared to arm and aid southeast Asia nations if their people show a will to fight for independence. No United States troops would be sent, however.

2. A Chinese Communist invasion of Indo-China is unlikely because it is not necessary. Instead, the Communists will supply arms to rebel Ho Chi-minh, whose regime already is recognized by Red China and Russia.

3. The situation of the republic of South Korea is serious because a Communist victory there would threaten Japan, the major American base in the Orient now.

4. It is unlikely the Chinese Nationalists can hold their island fortress of Formosa.

Bladensburg Bus Route Changed to Pass Armory

The District Public Utilities Commission yesterday ordered a change in route of a Capitol Transit's Bladensburg bus line effective February 18 so buses will pass by the National Guard Armory.

The order affects buses traveling between Barney Circle and 34th st. ne. at the District line. They will now travel on 19th st., past the armory, instead of 17th st. The change was requested by the armory management for persons attending events there.

Without Being in Sight, Dog Bites Automobile

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 15 (AP). — When a dog bites an automobile, without being anywhere around, that ought to be news.

And that, says M. E. McDaniels, is exactly what happened while he was driving.

A tire, he explained, went flat. He found it had been punctured by a hound's tooth which it picked up.

Chinese Trade Pact Eyed by Soviet Group

London, Feb. 15 (AP).—Three east European nations were reported today to be forging, with Russia, a multi-million-dollar trade pact with Communist China.

The countries are Poland, Czechoslovakia and Finland. The latter, while not Communist, is dependent upon the good will of Russia. Delegations from these countries have been in Moscow during the Chinese-Russian talks which culminated yesterday in the signing of a new Sino-Soviet treaty.

The effect of such an agreement, which would be on an interlocking basis, would be to weld European and Asiatic communism even more closely together. Figures have not been mentioned by Eastern diplomats here, who revealed the treaty moves, but the amount is expected to be large. Evidently this would supplement the 300-million-dollar Sino-Soviet agreement just negotiated in Moscow.

Taken in combination with Russia's concessions to China in Manchuria, such a pact could well eliminate the United States as a required factor in the future development of China.

Chou Hails Pact With Russia

Moscow, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—Chinese Communist Premier and Foreign Minister Chou En-lai hailed the new Sino-Soviet Treaty as one that would have profound historic significance, Moscow's newspapers reported today.

Foreign observers noted especially the tone and tenor of the cordiality of Chou's remarks during the signing ceremony which was featured in huge 8-column pictures on the front pages. The treaty itself filled the first two pages.

Conclusion of the accords appeared to dispose of persistent foreign rumors of a rift between Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung and Premier Josef Stalin.

The obvious cordiality and friendship was displayed further in Stalin's unprecedented attendance at a farewell banquet given by Mao following the signing.

Chou called the 30-year alliance "evidence of the fraternal friendship and eternal collaboration between China and the Soviet Union."

"Conclusion of the pact is a special expression of ardent aid to the revolutionary cause of the Chinese people on the part of the Soviet Union guided by Generalissimo Stalin's policies," he said.

"There isn't the slightest doubt that the close and sincere collaboration between the Soviet Union and China will have the highest degree of profound historic significance and inevitable enormous influence and consequences for the cause of peace and justice to the peoples of the East and the whole world."

Chou referred to "American imperialism which employed all possible methods to break the friendship between our two powers but all these disgraceful attempts conclusively failed."

Boston Cancels Rite for Lincoln And Washington

Boston, Feb. 13 (AP). — Boston has cancelled its annual observance of the births of Lincoln and Washington in historic Faneuil Hall because only a handful of people attend.

This year's patriotic exercises in the "Cradle of American Liberty"—the 187-year-old hall that sheltered town meetings during the revolution—had been scheduled for next Sunday.

Mayor John B. Hynes cancelled the program, however, with the explanation that "lack of public interest" made the program "a waste of money." None of the city's numerous patriotic organizations so far has raised objection.

Hynes said he would remember the two Presidents by placing wreaths at their statues. He recalled that former Mayor James M. Curley called attention to the fact that "only 34 persons showed up" at last year's exercises on February 12, at which Curley was the principal speaker.

Nourse Urges 'Stern Gospel' of Economy

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The United States must turn from an "easy optimism" about its economic future, and embrace a "sterner gospel" of restraint and self-discipline on the part of special interests, Dr. Edwin C. Nourse declared yesterday.

Otherwise, the former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors warned, America will be unable to play the role for which it is responsible; serving as center and support for the development of the free, democratic half of the world.

Nourse's comments were made in his first public speech in Washington after he resigned from the Government's chief economic advisory post last December.

The postwar dream of one world however noble, is not now within reach, Nourse argued. The present task must be, he went on, to preserve sound, healthy economic and political forms of life in that half of the world which is still free.

But, Nourse said, in order for the United States to perform its central role in this job, it must build and maintain "dynamic stability" at home.

He stated bluntly, however, that he could not share the usual confidence that the present economic situation was headed in that direction. Rather, he indicated, unless "we improve our standards and raise our performance" the Nation may be headed into serious economic decline.

Nourse's fears concerned three items that he has complained of previously, and that were central in the controversy leading to his resignation from the Government last year.

The first was his obligation to what he implied was resignation to and tolerance of "indefinitely" continuing with deficit spending.

The second, which Nourse phrased in cautious terms, related to a disposition to draw too much of the national product off to purely military uses.

He warned that the industrial plant of the Nation must be kept strong, for military needs themselves, and in order to produce a standard of living high enough to prevent individual morale, and faith in democracy, from crumbling.

Nourse's third, and apparently most serious worry, was what he described as a "gimme" philosophy among special interests.

Segments of labor, finance, business, and agriculture, he said, sought to obtain too large a share of the economy. They worked too much for short-term gains.

In passing Nourse condemned the foreign policy of attempted "containment" of Russia as being untenable. The more proper policy, which he felt was now coming to be adopted, was to support the free nations and help them survive and grow strong, rather than to weld them into an offensive force against Russia.

Nourse criticized some of those nations, however, on grounds that they, too, had the "gimme" point of view.

Like special interests here, he said, they pushed their claims too much for their individual short-term interests.

Nourse spoke before the World Affairs Center, a Washington organization created after the war to discuss current issues.

His invitation to make the address, however, is known to have caused a controversy within that group. Many members objected, it was learned yesterday, on grounds of Nourse's recent speeches and articles highly critical of Administration policy.

Accordingly, many who had bought tickets to the luncheon at the large Hall of Nations in the Washington Hotel stayed away. Tables had been set with 175 covers, but only about 25 guests attended.

Bureau Asks 875 Millions to Buttress Unemployment Insurance Funds of States

By the United Press

The Bureau of Employment Security through Director Robert C. Goodwin has asked the House Appropriations Committee for 875 million dollars to help States that may bankrupt their unemployment insurance funds.

He said jobless benefit funds in Rhode Island may be exhausted this year, and that four or five other States may run out of money within the next few years.

In testimony made public yesterday, Goodwin stressed the need for action by communities themselves.

In some areas, 25 percent of the workers are unemployed, Goodwin testified. Ten States have "serious" problems either in the whole State or in parts of the State, he said, and 25 others have "one or more" unemployment problems.

He said the worst regions are New England, the coal area of Pennsylvania and "a few spots" in Michigan.

"It is not much consolation to people who live in an area where there is 25 percent unemployment to know that down in Dallas they have only 2 percent, unless they can move down there, which a lot of people seem to be doing these days," Goodwin said.

Representative Frank B. Keefe (R., Wis.) said the best relief for Rhode Island would be repeal of jewelry excise taxes, which have had "a devastating effect upon manufacturers of jewelry."

Goodwin proposed grants of $20,000 to 10 States with "serious" problems to permit them to hire leaders for community programs. In 25 other States, he suggested grants of $10,000 for the same purpose.

U. S. Starts Buying Spuds Of 1950 Crop

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Uncle Sam already has started buying 1950 potatoes, before he has half completed his purchase of the 1949 crop.

More than 11,000 bushels of early spuds—the kind that were selling at Washington stores for 6 cents a pound yesterday—have already been bought under the price-support program in Florida.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is paying about $2.50 a 100-pound sack for the Florida crop. At the same time, CCC is struggling with the problem of what to do with about 45 million bushels of 1949 potatoes—most of them in Maine—which it expects to buy in the next few weeks.

The opening of the price-support program for 1950 potatoes virtually assures another expensive potato year. Any attempt this year to reduce the amount Congress ordered CCC to pay potato growers, or to remove price supports from potatoes, will be violently opposed.

Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan told Congress two weeks ago that once the new crop started coming in, or planting was well under way, it would be unfair to change price-support levels. Farmers determine their plantings under an implied agreement with the Government as to their returns, he said. In other words, he indicated, the Government is morally bound to carry out the potato program now in the law for this year.

In New York Dun & Bradstreet reported a sharp jump in the wholesale price of potatoes in the face of Government efforts to give them away. Potatoes went from $1.75 a sack (100 pounds) to 2.67½, Dun & Bradstreet said.

Eggs, another commodity the Government is trying to give away, rose 1 cent a dozen, from 32½ to 33½ cents. Uncle Sam has about 73 million pounds of dried eggs that cost about 100 million dollars.

Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale food index rose 6 cents this week to $5.86—the highest in six months.

Government figures showed 119 million bushels of 1949 potatoes still in the country. Of these, 44 million are in Maine, most of them in one county. Idaho has only 13 million.

Good news on the food front came from the Agriculture Department. That was that housewives can expect more and cheaper beef next year. There are more than 80 million head of cattle in the country—3 percent above a year ago.

End of Spud Support Without Control Voted

The Senate Agriculture Committee voted yesterday to end Government price supports for potatoes unless the growers accept strict marketing controls to prevent surplus production.

Tax Repealers Get Leon Henderson Aid

Some of the Nation's leading businessmen, backed by a former OPA champion of New Deal tax policies, urged Congress yesterday to repeal more than two billion dollars in wartime excise taxes.

Dwarfing the Administration's bid for a modest 600 million dollar downward revision of excises, the group blamed declining trends in 21 industries on the "regressive impact" of the levies.

Organized as the National Committee for Repeal of Wartime Excise Taxes, the group appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee with Leon Henderson, former OPA administrator, who once recommended imposition of some of the levies.

Levied As Wartime Controls

Contending that the Government in the end would get back all but about one billion of the taxes, Henderson said the 1941, 1942 and 1943 excise increases were levied as wartime controls, and should long since have been abandoned in peacetime.

Unlike Treasury Secretary John Snyder, who asked Congress to make only "the most urgently needed reductions," Henderson recommended "across the board" repeal of all wartime excises except those on alcohol, tobacco and gasoline.

He and the following top business executives argued that such action will increase jobs, payrolls and business and provided for an expanding economy:

Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association of America; Arde Bulova, board chairman, Bulova Watch Co.; Louis Ruthenburg, board chairman, Servel, Inc., and Frank M. Mayfield, president, Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney, Inc. Mayfield testified as chairman of the national committee for repeal of wartime excises, and Henderson as its consulting economist. Johnston, Bulova and Ruthenburg appeared as vice-chairmen.

Call Outright Repeal Just

"We believe that nothing short of outright repeal of these taxes is just and right," Johnston told the House tax-making unit.

"We ask the committee to redress a grievance on the simple ground of fair play and good sense."

Apart from this group, T. F. McMains, vice-president, Western Union Telegraph Co., said continuance of the 25 percent tax on telegrams could bring insolvency on his company and put the Government in the telegraph business.

"The decision affects a fundamental national policy, namely private ownership or nationalization of the Nation's telegraph system," said McMains.

Walter R. McDonald, counsel for the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, called special levies on transportation and communication services "inimical to the maintenance of a reasonably priced and non discriminatory" service.

The group led by Mayfield sought to wipe out the war-increased levies on jewelry, furs, luggage, toilet preparations, stoves, theater admissions, raw film stock, photographic apparatus and many another commodity and service.

Half-Million in Orders Lost by U. S. Engineer

Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 15 (AP).—The FBI and other law enforcement agencies are looking for a briefcase containing up to a half-million dollars in negotiable Government purchasing orders.

The briefcase disappeared yesterday after it was left in a hotel lobby by its owner, Arthur G. Huey of Minneapolis, regional engineer for the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

He was on his way to the nearby Oak Ridge atomic plant on business.

Reserve Board View On Housing Bill Due

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System will report to Congress today on whether they believe the Administration's "middle income" housing bill would contribute to inflation.

The report will be made to the full Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, which deferred action on the measure until it could obtain the opinion of the Nation's top bankers.

Meanwhile, the formal printed report of the Senate subcommittee on Housing and Rents, which approved the measure before the full committee met, was released yesterday. In the interim, some members of the subcommittee, particularly Senator Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.), appear to have retreated from their initial support of the bill.

Representative Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. (D., Lib., N. Y.) yesterday submitted a letter in support of the measure to the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

As cochairman of the National Veterans Housing Conference, Roosevelt said, he knows veterans do not want "handouts."

"They do ask us to remove unnecessary and indefensible road blocks to sound housing, so that they may make their own way on their own feet."

The subcommittee reported that "the bulk of the housing being produced under FHA now is not suited at all to the needs of families with children."

The report stated that 93 percent of FHA-insured single-family houses in 1948 had five or fewer rooms and 60 percent four rooms or fewer.

Lustron Military Homes Asked

By The Associated Press

A House committee may explore the possibility of Government use of the big Lustron Corp. plant at Columbus, Ohio, to make prefabricated houses for the armed forces.

A well-informed source told a reporter the Banking Committee decided at a closed meeting yesterday to look into the matter. He said the idea is to make porcelained steel prefabricated houses.

The RFC announced Tuesday night it has ordered its legal staff to start foreclosure suit as soon as possible against Lustron on grounds the company is in default on loans by the Government totaling $37,500,000.

Lustron said yesterday the corporation will fight to the end to avert the threatened foreclosure.

What will your housing dollar buy in the $7,000 to $11,000 price range? You can take a picture tour of new homes selling in that bracket in the Real Estate Section of The Sunday Washington Post.

10 Rescued In B-36 Crash

p. m. EST) to fly them to McCord air force base near Tacuma, Wash.

Neither the coast guard nor the RCAF knew the identities of the men taken to Port Hardy.

The Canadian press earlier reported the first eight survivors were: Captain Barry; Lieut. Raymond T. Whitefield, jr., San Antonio, Tex.; Lieut. Paul E. Gerhart, Germantown, Pa.; Lieutenant Colonel McDonald; Sergt. James R. Ford, Holdenville, Okla.; Lieut. Ernest O. Cox, Pampa, Tex. (the first report had him listed by the name of Todd); Sergt. Martin B. Stephens, San Francisco, and Sergeant Trippodi.

The Canadian press said a 25-man landing party from the Canadian destroyer Cayua was fanning out over the 1404-square mile Princess Royal Island.

Three engines were afire when the six-engine, six-million-dollar Air Force heavyweight headed for the icy waters off the northern coast of British Columbia around midnight Monday.

The bomber was en route to its home base at Fort Worth, Tex., after leaving Alaska on the return leg of a training flight. Fire in first one, then two engines, crippled it while severe icing conditions forced it lower and lower.

Three of the men were taken off a rubber life raft some distance from shore, while the other seven were picked up from the shores of the island by the same fishing boat.

Sergeant Trippodi was reported trapped on a cliff for more than 10 hours. He was hanging by one foot, caught in a crevice, when rescuers reached him this morning.

"He is in bad shape," said the captain. "He is still on the island and the fishing boat Cape Perry is sending a party ashore to try and bring him down."

8 Killed in Crash Of B-29 Search Plane

Great Falls, Mont., Feb. 15 (AP). A Spokane-based B-29 bomber carried eight men to a flaming death today when it crashed while taking off to lead a search for the B-36 missing off British Columbia.

The big four-motored ship roared down the runway of the Great Falls Air Force base, climbed about 100 feet, then crashed and—exploded.

Crew members near the nose were trapped in the flames. Seven who were in rear compartments escaped without serious injury while flares exploded around them.

Virginia Senate Passes Bill For State Seizure of Mines

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—The Senate today passed the bill empowering the Governor to seize and operate coal mines in event of crippling strikes.

Before passage the Senate voted down all hostile amendments but adopted an amendment by Senators M. M. Long of Wise and Harry Stuart of Russel to make it subject to all provisions of the general law aplicable to coal mining operations. The House quickly concurred in the Senate Amendment and now the bill goes to Governor Battle for his signature.

On passage the Senate voted 37 to 1 for the bill with Senator Lloyd M. Robinette of Lee Casting the only negative vote.

Senator Long said the purpose of the adopted amendment was to allay uneasiness on the miners' part over their status under the workmen's compensation law and State and Federal safety regulations should the State have to seize and operate coal mines.

Brennan said four inspectors will be on the job to be sure the order is carried out.

Some agencies, notably, Glenn Dale Sanitarium, the Public Library and the Fire Department have already acted to cut down on coal consumption, Brennan said.

Coal-using buildings include the District Building, Ford Building, District Training School at Laurel, Md., Industrial Home School for white children and the penal institutions at Lorton and Occoquan, Va., and various other miscellaneous buildings.

Would Defer Rationing

Meanwhile, coal dealers urged the Commissioners to hold up until Monday any plan for soft coal rationing.

Such a plan was presented the Comissioners yesterday by a fuel conservation committee headed by J. Thomas Kennedy, District Superintendent of Weights, Measures and Markets. The plan, it was learned, would provide for allocation of supplies according to need.

Patrick A. Deck, spokesmen for the dealers, said restriction of soft coal deliveries to three days' supply should stretch out existing stocks for 14 days if present weather conditions hold. Soft coal is used chiefly by apartments, hotels and office buildings, he said.

Deck informed the Commissioners following a meeting of most local coal dealers yesterday morning:

(1) Dealers will assure hospitals and other top priority institutions of coal for three weeks.

(2) If persons who cannot get coal from their dealers call Merchants & Manufacturers Association (NA. 2611), their cases will be relayed to other dealers.

(3) The dealers are ready to meet again with the Commissioners Monday to consider further action.

Since only one of the three Commissioners, Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, was present, no formal action was taken on Kennedy's plan. Approval is expected today.

In Virginia, where the Norfolk & Western Railway Co. said it will lay off 1900 at its Roanoke shop Friday, Gov. John S. Battle said he may use a wartime act to seize mines if miners do not return to work in a few days.

Maryland Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., has called for a survey of coal supplies. He said the situation didn't appear serious.

management and industry to resume negotiations.

Lewis objected, and said he interpreted the court's order to mean that the union should bargain at one and the same time with all the operator groups. The Southern mine owners walked out of the meeting over this point and went to Judge Richmond B. Keech, of District Court here, for clarification of his injunction. Keech suggested that the Southern group participate in a joint session with the Northern-Western operators and the representatives of the "captive" mines, which are operated by the steel companies for their own use.

The Southern Association then returned to the meeting, but announced that it was maintaining its "separate identity."

South Wants Separate Pact

Later, Joseph E. Moody, president of the Southern group, told reporters that his association "needs a separate contract" and therefore "wants a separate conference." He refused to comment on the possibility that the Southern operators might be seeking a wage differential.

Meanwhile, although UMW President John L. Lewis was complying with Judge Keech's mandate to bargain, the striking soft-coal miners were ignoring the jurist's order for an immediate end to the strike. The court issued the injunction last Saturday at the instance of President Truman, who earlier in the week had invoked the "national emergency" provisions of the Taft-Hartley Management-Labor Relations act.

There was no sign that the Government would seek further court action to get the miners to return to the pits, despite the spreading impact of the coal shortage. Latest estimates have but 10 days' supply of bituminous coal stockpiled above ground for the entire country.

Union headquarters here announced yesterday there could be no doubt but that all the United Mine Workers' 3000 locals have been official notified of the court's return-to-work order. But there was no such move reported anywhere in the coal fields. Some unions have voted against compliance; the rest simply did nothing.

Pickets Damage Camps

In Harlan County, Ky., several hundred roving pickets swarmed into 10 mining camps and damaged property and equipment. Similar raids were reported the day before in Pennsylvania.

On Capitol Hill, the Senate Judiciary Committee called a subcommittee hearing for today to start hearings on a bill which would subject unions to the anti-trust laws for unreasonable restraints on trade. The legislation is aimed at the union-imposed three-day work week in the mines.

Other coal developments yesterday:

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey announced coal will be rationed in New York starting Friday.

Iron Age, steel trade weekly, predicted that major segments of the steel industry will be forced to shut down if the coal strike continues for another week.

Norfolk & Western Railway announced the closing of its Roanoke, Va., shops because of the coal strike. By Friday, the railroad will have laid off 5400 employes because of the loss in coal traffic.

Windsors Not to Live In London, Duke Says

Mexico City, Feb. 15 (AP).—The Duke of Windsor emphatically quieted today London rumors of last week that the Duchess and he plan to make their home in England.

"There is no truth (in that report)," he said at a news conference.

A Mexican reporter inquired about the H-bomb and the Duke replied, "I don't know anything about it at all. I would not give any opinion."

FCC Doubts If Ads Affect Phone Rates

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday declared "it is doubtful" whether the Bell Telephone System's recent series of newspaper ads about the industry labor dispute has "any significant bearing" on the phone rates.

The commission observed that "the entire consolidated advertising expense of the Bell System for the first eleven months of 1949 represented less than seven-tenths of 1 percent of operating expenses.

Anyhow, the FCC said, the commission is in no position to rule on the question because it has no telephone rate case before it. The FCC's statement was part of its reply to Joseph A. Beirne, president of the CIO Communication Workers of America, who complained about the advertisements on employe wages by Bell subsidiaries, including the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. here.

The union yesterday attacked the "double standard" of wages in the telephone industry, one standard for executives, the other for rank-and-file workers. CWA President Beirne asserted that Leroy Wilson, president of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., parent organization of the Bell System, got two salary raises in the past two years. He said Wilson was getting $125,000 a year in 1948 and is now paid $178,000.

No progress was reported across the country in negotiations between Bell subsidiaries and CWA affiliates. Similarly, no advance in bargaining was made locally between two CWA divisions here and C. & P.

The Communication Workers of America have scheduled a Nationwide strike for February 24.

Messiah Plea Delays Death Sentencing

New York, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—Murderer Lewis Wolfe, 42, was scheduled to be sentenced to die today because doctors said he had been cured of insanity, but a full sanity hearing was ordered for him instead after he demanded two bananas and shouted, "I am the Messiah."

Judge Louis Goldstein declined to condemn the cocky little defendant before he had full proof of his sanity. Wolfe beat his wife, Paula, 27, to death with a shoe in 1944. He said he had to do it because they had made a pact that if either were unfaithful the other should slay him. Wolfe was adjudged insane and after five years in an institution, psychiatrists certified him as recovered, which meant mandatory death in the electric chair.

Psychiatrists Declare GI Sane at Slaying

Three psychiatrists for the prosecution testified before a Bolling Field court-martial yesterday that Pfc. Stanley F. Edelbaum was sane enough to distinguish right from wrong when he allegedly strangled a streetwalker in Paris May 8.

Edelbaum, 20-year-old Brooklyn, N. Y., boy, was described as a schizophrenic (split personality) by three defense psychiatrists Tuesday, opening day of the general court. The court-martial is sitting to determine whether the former Army bandsman is sane—and must face trial for the murder—or if insane will be given psychiatric treatment.

The three psychiatrists—Drs. Seymour J. Rosenberg, Capt. S. L. Baker and Maj. Julian C. Kennedy—described Edelbaum as a "schizoid" personality. (This is a mental condition approaching schizophrenia.)

CIO Ousts 3 Left-Wing Unions

By the United Press

The national CIO yesterday expelled three left-wing unions for following the "twists and turns" of the Communist Party line and prepared similar action today against another.

In rapid-fire order, the CIO executive board ousted the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, effective immediately, and the United Office and Professional Workers and the Food, Tobacco, and Agricultural Workers, effective March 1.

The United Public Workers Union faces almost certain expulsion today.

The three expelled unions have a combined membership of about 78,500, while the UPW has some 30,000 members.

Silver Spring, Takoma Dog Quarantine Ends

The dog quarantine imposed by Montgomery County authorities in the Silver Spring-Takoma Park area last November ended yesterday.

The county council decided against extending the quarantine as it was felt that its immediate need has ended. A county-wide dog ordinance enacted February 7 will take effect March 9.

Under the ordinance all dogs must either be vaccinated or kept in confinement or on leash. County operated vaccination clinics will be held annually in May and June.

Civil Rights Action Scheduled Today

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A showdown today in the House Rules Committee on the long-pigeonholed fair employment practices bill was ordered last night by House Rules Chairman Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.).

Sabath called a special meeting of the committee for 10 o'clock this morning, with FEPC the sole item of business.

Fearful that yesterday's day-long "calendar Wednesday" filibuster in the House will be repeated when FEPC gets its first calendar call on Wednesday a week, Sabath said he will attempt to report the measure directly to the House.

Incidentally, he said, he intends to put the four Republican members of the committee "on the spot."

Even GOP Split Seen

"I want a record made," said Sabath. "We know how the four Southern Democrats on my committee will vote. Now let's see how many Republican members will vote with them."

Indications have been that the four GOP members will split down the middle on the FEPC issue, with two of them voting with four Northern Democrats to report the bill and the other two lining up with the four Southern Democrats against it. That would bottle up the bill once again, this time by a 6-to-6 tie vote.

At the last attempted showdown on January 24, with two Republicans absent, the bill was blocked by a 5-to-5 tie.

One Republican, Representative Christian A. Herter (Mass.), voted with the four Northern Democrats to report the bill, and another Republican, Representative Clarence J. Brown (Ohio), voted with the four Southerners.

Move to Reconsider

Brown immediately moved to reconsider the vote, however, saying he had voted as he did "to protect" two Republican absentees, Representatives Leo E. Allen (Ill.) and James W. Wadsworth (N. Y.). Wadsworth and Allen are expected to be present today. Barring a last-minute upset, they are expected to vote against clearance.

Reports that House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr. (Mass.), is bringing pressure to swing three Republican votes to the bill meanwhile were denied by Martin.

"I personally would like to see the (FEPC) bill brought out of the committee, so we can get some work accomplished in the House," Martin told newsmen. "But I never attempt to 'pledge' members of my party in the House."

Representative Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., (D., Mass.), sponsor of one of two "discharge" petitions designed to force floor action, meanwhile predicted in the House that only two Rules Committee Republicans will line up with the four Northern Democrats for the bill.

Urging leaders of both parties to "get behind it," Roosevelt asked House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) how soon the bill would be "programmed" in event it wins the Rules Committee test.

"If it is given a rule, and I hope that it is, it is my intention to program it for early next week," McCormack said.

Veteran Faces Dope Charge After Hospital Visit

Edward L. Jackson, jr., 28, an Air Force veteran, was arrested on a marijuana charge by a Federal agent as he emerged from Bethesda Naval Hospital yesterday.

Jackson entered the hospital 10 days ago for a minor operation. During his stay, the Federal Bureau of Narcotics was informed he had six marijuana cigarettes among his possessions.

When Jackson was discharged from the hospital yesterday an agent was waiting. He said the cigarettes were given him by a chance acquaintance in a downtown Washington bar.

Jackson, whose address was given as 518 H st. nw., was held in $1000 bond by U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence and his hearing continued until March 1.

House Fiddles Along While District Measures Languish

be a four-hour roll-call "filibuster" was executed by Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.), a District Committee member.

He objected to a normally routine motion to "dispense with further proceedings" and demanded a roll-call vote. It was defeated, 256-82.

From then on the Dixiecrats were off. Representative James P. Richards (D., S. C.) made a motion to adjourn which was defeated, 236-97.

Representative John B. Williams (D., Miss.) then hopped up, moving to dispense with "Calendar Wednesday," defeated, 288-94.

If passed, Williams' motion would have permitted District Committee recognition next Wednesday—and delayed FEPC legislation another week.

In other words, if FEPC foes could have prevented Speaker Rayburn from giving the floor to McMillan yesterday, he and his local measures would have been eligible for another shot at holding the floor next Wednesday.

Ed Gossett (D., Tex.) made another motion to adjourn; defeated this time 218-109.

Point of No Quorum

District Committee member Oren Harris (D., Ark.) next took the floor to say "we have some very important District legislation" and suggested there should be more members on hand to consider it. He made a point of no quorum. Another 25 minutes consumed.

Two roll calls later, the filibuster was halted, McMillan recognized and the Girl Scout bill brought up.

Several members gave passing, but enthusiastic, approval to the scout bill and promptly launched into the pros and cons of FEPC legislation—the real issue before them.

Gossett took occasion to point up the "irony" of incorporating the Girl Scouts to foster American morality on the very same day that "Stromboli," an "outrageous" film, was having its premiere in the Nation's Capital.

Rabout jumped up to tell his colleagues he was introducing a measure to curb "galloping nuscout bands" who jump States to desert their families.

The Girl Scout bill was unanimously passed by voice vote of the few members still in the chamber at the 5 p. m. voting time.

McMillan was hesitant about attempting to ask action on the other local measures because they had only been approved at a hurriedly called meeting Tuesday after the House had adjourned. The book says bills must be reported to the House one Legislative day before floor action may be sought.

New Airport

Administration support for a second major airport in the Washington area should be a powerful boost for Senator Johnson's bill now before Congress. Certainly there ought to be no question about the need. Undersecretary of Commerce Whitney estimates that Washington will have 40 percent more civilian traffic by 1955. The National Airport now is handling just about all the traffic it can accommodate. This aside from the fact that the conflicting traffic patterns of Bolling and Anacostia military fields create a safety hazard that will grow as congestion increases. We still think that military operations ought to be removed to Andrews Field and the Patuxent Naval Air Station, though this transfer would not increase the capacity of National materially. Nor would the proposals to use the new Friendship Airport near Baltimore for overflow traffic meet the real need. Convenience is a prime factor in the location of an airport, and Friendship is many miles from Washington. Moreover, it was built to serve Baltimore, not Washington. The Nation's Capital is of sufficient importance as an air traffic center to warrant, as Mr. Whitney put it, "the best service that the air transportation industry can offer."

Once Congress acts, the big question, of course, will be where to put the airport. Accessibility is of prime importance, and for that reason the site near Annandale, Va., seems to make more sense than other proposed locations in nearby Virginia and Maryland. The new Shirley highway makes a trip to Annandale a matter of only a few minutes. Even more important than accessibility, however, is the need to insure that the new airport will have unrestricted approaches and will be free from conflicting air traffic patterns in the future. A mistake was made in the location of the National Airport, and the trouble that has ensued should be a warning against making the same mistake again.

Mr. Churchill's Hint

Mr. Churchill's hint in favor of showdown talks with Stalin will no doubt embarrass the State Department. What it reflects is the acute discomfort that has been created in Europe by the H-bomb decision and the seeming acceptance in this country of the thesis that the dominating policy for America to pursue is bigger and better armament. An armament race is bound to lead to war. Europe is bound to be the battleground. The idea that this country can secure both this continent and the European continent merely with a military machine is sheer hallucination. There is no such insurance. What would happen would be not so much a challenge from the Soviet Union, but a steady march of this country into the status of a garrison state, whence only war would result. The American psychology is not such as to get all dressed up and then not to go places.

To say this is not to assert that the United States and its allies must content themselves with an inferior defense. By no means. As good a defense as our means and the maintenance of our way of life will allow must continue to be our policy. But of equal importance to military leadership is moral leadership—meaning by this a constant readiness to talk peace, not appeasement; a drive to find economic and political solutions; a willingness to put our economic surplus at the service of mankind. Without such vision, the people will perish. Without it, hope will vanish in Europe and effort will atrophy as the people fatalistically await der tag. Already the Atlantic Pact appears to be moribund, as if the nations are thinking about storm cellars for an inter-Titan conflict.

It is no disparagement of Candidate Churchill to say that in throwing out his hint the Conservative leader was expressing a popular feeling. That is the reason it is important. However, what Mr. Churchill says is entirely consistent with his past position. At Fulton, he warned the United States of Russian aggression and pleaded with America to arm quickly. In Boston a year ago, he expressed his gratification over the military posture which at that time the United States had achieved. His present statement is a reminder that statecraft shall not be forgotten in the reliance upon military defense—that, in the 1907 words of one of the few permanent officials in British history who set down his thoughts on the responsibilities of a world power, Sir Eyre Crowe, world policy shall be > . . . so directed as to harmonize with the general desires and ideals common to all mankind, and more particularly that it is closely identified with the primary and vital interests of a majority, or as many as possible, of the other nations.

Clearly a mission to Moscow is not something to rush into, for failure would simply intensify the arms race, and put relations at fever point. Here is something for our proposed presidential commission to think over before stating the American case for domestic and foreign consumption. If it invites a response from Moscow showing any disposition to make a self-enforcing agreement, well and good—the response should be taken up.

Mao And Stalin

It is no use blinking the fact that a resounding diplomatic victory has been scored in Moscow by both Mao Tze-tung and Joseph Stalin. Mao comes back to Peking as a great patriot. He has won a promissory note from Moscow providing for the return of the Manchurian concessions that in 1945 Chiang Kai-shek gave to Russia at the instigation of Messrs. Roosevelt and Churchill at Yalta. Chiang is thus made to look like a traitor, Roosevelt and Churchill like horse thieves. Never mind that the Russians were the sole beneficiaries of this piece of pillage at China's expense. Or that they promptly started to loot the industrial domain they had been donated. Or that they stuck to Chiang Kai-shek even after he had confirmed the Yalta gift. In spite of all this, Russian imperialism and the lack of Russian faith in the Chinese Communists will be forgotten in the celebrations of this alliance. Russia has played both ends against the middle and won.

One wonders, however, whether this history made Mao Tze-tung use a long spoon in his dealings with Stalin. It is recent enough in all conscience. And it is all of a piece, in its chicanery, with the panorama of Russo-Chinese relations. This alliance against Japan will turn the Far Eastern student's mind back to the Russo-Chinese alliance of 1896, also directed against Japan. Here was the start of the tragic history of Manchuria as the modern world's great "cradle of conflict"—the master agreement which gave Russia railroad building rights in Manchuria. In part the concession represented the token of Chinese gratitude to Russia for denying to Japan Port Arthur and adjacent territory in Manchuria which Japan occupied during the Sino-Japanese war of 1894-5. The territorial integrity of China was, of course, guaranteed as part of this 1896 defensive alliance. Yet two years later, by an act of unparalleled duplicity, Russia laid claim to, and forced the cession of, precisely those Manchurian leaseholds she had denied to Japan.

That peerless Russian statesman, Count Witte (who subsequently gained world fame as the skillful negotiator of the Portsmouth treaty ending the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-5) fought in vain against the Manchurian grab with his colleagues in the Russian cabinet. In his memoirs he said his own country was guilty of "the height of treachery and faithlessness" to China. As one of the Russian signatories of the 1896 agreement, he felt his own honor had been betrayed. He wrote that "it was a fatal step, which eventually brought about the unhappy Japanese war (1904-5) and the subsequent (Russian) revolution (1905). He did not live long enough to add a line of other disturbances ending with the 1931 explosion in Manchuria which set in motion a series of wars. Nor did he live to see Communist Russia practice the same kind of trickery at China's expense as Tsarist Russia did. These concessions in Manchuria have been given back and reclaimed with interest ever since the early Bolsheviks, in the first flush of the revolution, disavowed them as the evil fruit of the "unequal treaties."

The Chinese thus may be sure that history will be repeated at their expense. The 1896 alliance was secret, and without a doubt there are secret clauses attached to this new alliance. Mao Tze-tung was not detained in Moscow for 60 days just for the negotiation of the instrument of alliance that has just been published. Moreover, as Secretary Acheson said yesterday, none of the treaties that Soviet Russia has negotiated with its dependents since the war has been regarded by any of them as "a happy relation for itself." Perhaps the Chinese are not aware of this, but the Chinese are aware of their dealings with Russia over Manchuria. Whatever the letter of the new alliance, the spirit in which it is signed is the spirit of 1896.

The Outlook For Jobs

The Department of Commerce reports that unemployment reached a postwar peak of nearly 4½ million in January—an increase of 991,000 over the December figure. This rise is attributed primarily to seasonal factors, such as the after-Christmas decline in retail employment, and bad weather which cut down farm and construction employment. Although the employment total is 1.8 million higher than it was a year ago, forecasters are inclined to discount its significance as an indicator of the business trend. They point out that farm employment and employment in other industries affected by bad weather will pick up as spring approaches.

Moreover, the rise in unemployment during the past year has been largely due to an increase in the number of people looking for work. That is shown by the fact that the number of agricultural workers employed in January was only 565,000 less than a year ago, while nonagricultural industries were employing nearly 100,000 more workers than in January, 1949. Since the immediate business outlook is favorable, industrial layoffs such as occurred last year are not anticipated. Consequently it is unlikely that industrial unemployment will increase during the next six months, provided strikes in basic industries do not destroy hopes of sustained business activity. Here is the big "if" in the economic outlook.

To be sure, business staged a quick comeback following the coal and steel strikes of last fall. But there are limits to the recuperative powers of the strongest business organism, if it is subjected to repeated assaults. Another round of labor disputes might prove to be the knockout blow that would prostrate the victim. The current coal strike has idled about 375,000 miners; and unless they promptly obey the injunction to return to work, layoffs of workers in other industries will follow and rail transportation will be partially paralyzed. The Chrysler strike has also added a good many thousands of workers to the army of the idle; and if the threatened telephone strike should materialize, business as usual would be impossible and many more thousands of workers would have to mark time.

Strikes in basic industries also have a long-range adverse effect on employment because they discourage the investment of new capital in business enterprises, thereby retarding an expansion of industry that is essential to provide jobs for a steadily increasing labor force. Furthermore, when consumer purchasing power is cut down by repeated strikes, the stimulative effect of high wages on business activity is impaired and the result is a shrinkage of productive output, or at best a slowing down of the rate of productive increase that spells chronic unemployment for large numbers of work-seekers. In other words, unless some method can be devised for peaceably settling disputes and averting strikes that periodically prostrate the country's basic industries, we shall never succeed in reaching and maintaining a level of industrial activity that will provide virtually full employment for all able-bodied workers.

Johnson Vs. Alsops

Defense Secretary Johnson's repeated assurance that the armed forces are "ready to go at 5 o'clock in the morning" is reminiscent of similar fatuities by the late Frank Knox on the eve of Pearl Harbor. Mr. Johnson's case for the kind of economies he has made under unification would be a great deal stronger if he would refrain from overstating it. What is needed is neither boasting nor bland assertion that everything is hunkydory, but rather sober appraisal of the actual status of the country's defense and acknowledgment of the factors which have led to the action that has been taken.

This is not to say that the extravagant criticism and impugning of Mr. Johnson's motives by Joseph and Stewart Alsop give a fair picture of what has happened. The Alsops cite reduction in Marine Corps strength and the number of naval vessels, and the bridle held on Air Force expansion, as evidence of their contention that combat readiness has not been increased. The trouble with this kind of reasoning is that it treats naval vessels and Air Force planes as entities in themselves. Whether cutbacks in certain items and increases in others are warranted can only be determined in relation to the over-all strategic plan and the balance of ready forces, each supporting the other, which the defense chiefs are trying to achieve.

Who is to say just what constitutes an adequate defense? We do not know. Neither, presumably, do the Alsops nor even Mr. Johnson, though he has the benefit of advice from a complex of sources. This much, however, is certain: the United States cannot have absolute military security. If this country tried to match everything the Russians are doing under a military economy, it would end with the same sort of garrison state. Nor does relative security lie in overemphasis on the quantity of weapons as the sole criterion, or in an exaggerated view of strategic bombing for which the Alsops are prone to beat their drums.

Accurate intelligence estimates, wide-awake research, superiority in the quality of weapons, strategy designed to counter items in which an enemy is strong—all these factors are part of the general term "security." So is a healthy national economy, and there is much truth in Mr. Johnson's statement: "The best defenses are no good if we wreck the national economy by too large a military budget." If the facile theories of 30-day victory are discounted, as we believe they must be even in the altered nature of warfare brought about by plutonium and hydrogen bombs, then the productive capacity of the country and the ability to expand it remain defense factors of immense importance.

What should the country expect in the way of adequate defense? First, it seems to us, there must be a reasonably ready striking force of planes, ships, troops and weapons, the nature to be determined by intelligence estimates. Here intelligence really becomes the first line of defense. Second, the country must get value received for each dollar spent. On this point some Johnson economies have helped improve defense—although the yardstick must always be not merely what is spent, but how it is spent. Economy must be conditioned on long-range effects. Third, there must be complete dovetailing of military policy with foreign policy, and a set of national objectives consistent with capabilities. Finally, the area of defense ought to be both strengthened and dispersed by including the nations of the free world. In other words, real defense is as much a political as a military matter, and its competence cannot be judged only by the number of aircraft carriers or heavy bombers the country possesses.

Britain's Dollars

Recent news stories have told of the dissatisfaction displayed by the State Department and certain U. S. oil companies over the refusal of Great Britain to buy any more U. S. oil on borrowed Marshall Plan dollars.

What, in this instance, is wrong with Britain's refusal? She is not dependent on U. S. oil; on the contrary, she can buy oil from her own Middle Eastern companies, who are bound to accept sterling in payment. Granted, U. S. companies want the business, but what kind of business is it if the U. S. taxpayer has to foot the bill? Frankly, it makes one think of the days 25 or 30 years ago, when some of our neophytic geniuses of Republican high finance lent money to European countries, with which to buy U. S. imports, rather than let down excessively high tariff barriers long enough to let them earn the money to pay for these goods.

What is true of U. S. oil companies is also true of the U. S. film industry. Most of us recall how the British were badgered and browbeaten into increasing their quotas of U. S. films, after they had told us that they had no more dollars with which to pay for them. Hollywood apparently expects the British to borrow dollars from the U. S. Treasury, under the Marshall Plan, to pay for these films. British films, which could be earning dollars here without hurting the U. S. film industry, are systematically barred from anything like first rate distribution here.

Some time ago, ECA Administrator Hoffman suggested to the French and British that they buy more of their tobacco from Greece, Turkey, and the African states, where their own money is acceptable, and thus ease the burden on the U. S. taxpayer. Representatives of the American tobacco industry immediately requested him to remain silent.

In the current political campaign, Mr. Churchill has raised anew the question of U. S. loans being frittered away on luxuries like U. S. films and tobacco. If he returns to power, he will not, unlike Mr. Attlee, be so easily driven away from a position that is inherently right. Then American luxury industries will be forced to apply directly to Washington for loans, grants, or subsidies, instead of covertly sifting dollars from Marshall Plan credits, which were set up for the purchase of necessities.

Hiss as a Martyr

I am not a professor of law, nor even a practitioner at law, and am therefore completely unqualified to answer the legal aspects of Mr. Charles S. Collier's communication of February 7 disputing the January 30 letter of Thurman Arnold, Wendell Berge, et al, which commented on your editorial of January 27, "Conflict Of Loyalties." However, even though I do not presume to question Mr. Collier's undoubted legal exactitude, I do, as a layman, take exception to his overlooking completely the human aspects of the case, as contrasted to the legal.

The "witches" who were indicted, convicted, and burned to death in colonial times were so treated in complete conformity to all legal precedent. Yet who today would "confirm" their guilt? As a matter of fact, why the opprobrium attached to the very words, "witch hunt?" And why is this term now applied to the Mitchell Palmer prosecutions following World War I? And who, today, cognizant of all the facts of the case, considers Sacco and Vanzetti to have been justly convicted, even though no legal court has reversed the original decision?

Let us frankly admit to ourselves that Alger Hiss has been set up as our whipping boy and is being martyred only because of our hysteria, our terrible, ever-frightening sense of insecurity due to our not being able constructively to keep up with the terrible destructive forces unleashed by our scientists. For how else could a man of such stature, of such previously unquestioned integrity, be condemned on the word of an admitted liar, spy, perjurer, and Communist? And let us hope that at some time in the future we may return to some semblance of sanity and normality and recognize the terrible injustice we are doing to Alger Hiss.

MRS. DONALD C. BEATTY,

"L'Affaire Bergman"

It was with distinct sense of shock that I read your February 11 editorial, noting especially the closing sentence: "It is possibly true that the scandals involving these stars have played a part in the corruption of popular morals and manners, but this could be true only among a people predisposed to corruption."

Does the writer have any idea of the numerous physical and mental efforts that parents of young children make, in order to keep before them examples of moral conduct yielding the most profitable results? The effort to rid the community of crime, to help parents in financial straits bring up their children in decent houses, decent schools, among decent people—this effort seems too ridiculous as one listens presumably to the voice of a democratic, social-minded newspaper, so-called, saying cynically that examples of moral turpitude, widely publicized, can only corrupt a people disposed to corruption.

This is a point of view that one certainly is free to take, but not to publicize under the aegis of The Washington Post. You nullify every one of your pages, every one of your exposes in defense of honest government, environmental aids, improvement of movies, literature, etc.

Sadly, the view expressed—although the writer laughs at the glamour of movie stars that must be upheld, and their economic value, his viewpoint stems directly from the fact that the characters involved in this incident are movie people, and so a different standard can be applied to them. The Declaration of Independence refutes this.

My children read the papers, go to the movies. All the other parents I know—intelligent, effortful, responsible citizens of this community, and those all over the country, are doing their level best to combat the depressing world conditions, the inevitable laxity that follows wars, crime, juvenile delinquency—and when I read an editorial like this one, I can just say to myself bitterly: what is the use?

MOTHER.
Washington.

So far as I am concerned, a most satisfactory answer would be another editorial. My name, I think, would add no more to these comments. Also I'd prefer not to have my children read it under my name, since, if you are a parent—it unfortunately (a laugh here) adds nothing to the authority of the words—if it is your child. In other words—the young will tell you—"It's true—I read it in the paper!" That is the great responsibility a newspaper bears.

Rather than condemning Miss Bergman as a human being subject to human emotions, we should ask ourselves what value we place upon acting ability and to what extent are we influenced by persons gifted with such talent. To some people the movies afford objective relaxation where the tension of reality can be forgotten. Their only interest is in how well, how convincingly, the particular role is portrayed. These individuals are fortunate indeed for they are not "taken in" by modern publicity methods nor by the tremendous pressures of our advertising society. Their criticisms, if any, are theirs, and therefore quite logical.

However, a majority of moviegoers tend to magnify their heros and heroines to a point far out of proportion to mere acting ability. Not content with seeing their favorites on the screen, these theater lovers take their particular stars home with them, live with them, eat with them and often introduce them to the children. With motion pictures having so much influence in our society, it can not be considered radical for people to defend their moral failings with, "If they can, why can't I?"

It is high time that the motion-picture industry realize its moral responsibility to the public welfare and do some housecleaning.

Gellatly Collection

For some time many of those of us interested in the appreciation of American painting have been concerned with the inaccessibility of some of the finest examples of the greatest American master. I refer to the fact that the greatest example of the work of Albert Ryder entitled Jonah and the Whale and 10 other fine examples hang in the Gellatly Collection in the gallery of the United States National Museum, Smithsonian Institution. This particular gallery, placed as it is in a building occupied by historical and ethnological exhibits, is not generally known to, and is rarely visited by, art lovers.

I am informed that under the terms of the Gellatly will it is impossible to make a loan of these paintings, or even have them reproduced in color, so that a wider public might enjoy them. This state of affairs is as if Melville's Moby Dick and his other works were known only to a few hundred readers.

In view of the situation, would not the most constructive solution be for the director of the museum to hang all the Ryders in the Gellatly Collection in one small niche or room, featured as an art shrine to be visited by all art lovers? Such a disposition of the situation would give an additional claim to fame to the Smithsonian Institution and make it a place to be visited not only by those interested in historical and ethnological exhibits but by art lovers. Above all, it would rescue from oblivion this great American achievement.

Political Masquerades

By Malvina Lindsay

Fine Feathered Omens

"I'M WORRIED about the Democrats," said the Mugwump.

"They seem to be doing all right," observed the Man About Town. "Take a look at the hotel lobbies. Count the Homburgs and mink capes. Feel the confidence, prosperity oozing around. Why these Jefferson-Jackson Day visitors don't look like Democrats!"

"That's just the trouble. Neither did Republicans look like Republicans at their box supper. I don't like it! I smell revolution."

The Man About Town looked nervously behind him. "You mean—" he whispered.

"I mean a complete upset in our political notions, folklore, platitudes. What will the political writers do? Ever since Andy Jackson and his crowd came to town they've been picturing Democrats, en masse at least, as roughnecks, Republicans as stuffed shirts. Most of us had the same idea. This makes just one more thing to change our minds about."

"Don't worry. These rallies are phony shows. How many Republican check writers ate chicken with their fingers at the box supper? How many Democratic voters who carry union cards will cavort in their Tuxedos tonight?"

"Just the same I see the handwriting," persisted the Mugwump. "I go along with the behaviorists. Remember the anarchist who wore a silk hat in which to hide his dynamite, and who wound up by heading a Tory ticket? The Democrats had better watch out!"

"They're safe as long as the Republicans keep calling them Socialists."

"That's another thing! As an independent in politics, I enjoy a good hot name-calling campaign. But how far will the Republicans get with 'Liberty versus Socialism' with the Democrats looking so well heeled and solid? How can you call a man a Socialist and expect anyone to believe you when he's tailored like a corporation board member and his wife's as sleek as a Vogue cover girl?"

"Well, I'm willing to admit the Democrats may be going ritzy, but I can't see the Republicans getting proletarian—not with that policy statement!"

"Ah, my friend, have you ever considered that the policy statement could step things along. Remember the Union League Club of Chicago has gone bankrupt. Also remember it's three generations from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves. It's about time the Republicans got back to Honest Abe."

"But I thought you viewed this change with alarm."

"I view any change with alarm. I dread seeing the Republicans changed to good fellows and trying to be palsy-walsy with the common man. It's been a lot of fun using them as whipping boys for Mrs. Grundy, the Old Lady Next Door, the town banker, the office boss, the village snob.

"But I hate much worse," continued the Mugwump, "to see the Democrats become so fat and purring. Look at all their best dressed men in the Senate—most of 'em former poor boys who worked their way up. Look at the State and local party leaders now confabbing in cocktail lounges. How long will it be before they hide out in hotel rooms or on nearby country estates for their politicking? It used to be a Democrat would tell you anything. That was good for the public. But now I detect a growing pompousness and reticence that always go with success and a good tailor. Watch my word—at their next party convention, they'll be staging their rows in smoked filled rooms with soundproof walls!"

"Yet a lot of people still think they're dangerous radicals."

"How can a man be radical or even liberal when he's going to eat grapefruit au kirsch, filet mignon Bordelaise, and consume his spuds under the alias of chateau pommes rissoles tonight—and pay $100 for the privilege? Now what did that perennial, bonafide Socialist, Norman Thomas demand when they gave him a testimonial dinner last week in New York? A $5 ticket ceiling!"

"When do you expect this revolution to break—1952?"

"Heavens no! Perhaps not in our lifetime. But I'm willing to wager that if the Democrats keep on winning and getting fatter and sleeker they'll be the conservative party of this country some day."

The Man About Town shuddered. "I'll take the bet," he said, "and pray I'm not here to collect it."

Catholic Youth Appeal

Announcement has been made of a $25,000 Catholic Youth Organization 1950 appeal. Funds are sought for recreation, cultural and athletic programs.

Yet it is a disturbing fact that the Catholic Youth Organization is operating on a segregated basis and hence it will be impossible for many Catholic laymen in this area to make a financial contribution so long as the present reactionary policy continues in force.

If the function of the CYO is to build good Christians and good citizens, then it should be fairly obvious that a policy of race discrimination and segregation is not conducive to that end.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Churchill And Another Talk

MR. TRUMAN must have thought of his own campaign when he read that Mr. Churchill, winding up his campaign, had said "I cannot help coming back to this idea of another talk with Soviet Russia on the highest level." Except that Mr. Churchill, rather than Chief Justice Vinson, would do the talking, the idea that Mr. Churchill came back to has also been Mr. Truman's idea.

Lippmann

It has long been Mr. Churchill's idea. Two years ago—when there was no election campaign in sight—he told the House of Commons that "with all consideration of the facts I believe it right to say today that the best chance of avoiding war is, in accord with the other democracies, to bring matters to a head with the Soviet government and by formal diplomatic processes, with all their privacy and gravity, to arrive at a lasting settlement. There is certainly enough for the interests of all if such a settlement could be reached. Even this method, I must say, however, would not guarantee that war would not come but I believe it would give the best chance of preventing it, and that if it came, we should have the best chance of coming out of it alive."

MR. CHURCHILL is not famous as an appeaser, a pacifist, a wishful thinker, a fellow-traveler, or as an idealist who does not understand the realities of power and of the existing situations of fact and of the nature of the Soviet state. If then, even he feels that there should be "a supreme effort to bridge the gulf between the two worlds so that each can live their life, if not in friendship, at least without the hatred of the cold war," no lesser man is qualified to dismiss the idea.

The question is what the talks at the highest level would be about if they were to offer any chance of producing a settlement of the kind Mr. Churchill is suggesting. Perhaps it is possible to make an informed guess about the general character of those talks. Indeed, that is indicated in Mr. Churchill's own remarks. The two worlds, he said, should be able to live their lives—which can mean only, I take it, that the cold war is not to end in unconditional surrender but in a negotiated settlement which establishes the limits of our respective spheres of influence. That is the kind of settlement which Churchill and Stalin were beginning to explore back in 1944, and they had made some progress with it in the Balkans.

SETTLEMENTS of this type do violence to the principles which we have espoused since Wilson's time. We have believed in one world or none, and we have thought that the idea of an agreed division into spheres of influence which reflects the balance of power belonged, as Secretary Hull once declared, to "the unhappy past."

But now, as we contemplate the unhappy present we shall have to ask ourselves whether we do not prefer two or three or four worlds to none at all. We shall have to ask ourselves whether the classic method of settling conflicts may not be the only method. I believe it is, and that "the new approach" which the people of the world are demanding will bring us to the rediscovery of the older approach which we abandoned before mankind was ready to live as one in one world. For in the history of great powers the agreed division of influence has been the only alternative to a war for universal dominion.

IT IS most unlikely, however, that a settlement of this type could be reached by dividing the whole world into two and only two great spheres of influence. If that were attempted, there could be no agreement. For it would mean an attempt to agree on whether each country was to enter the Soviet orbit or the Atlantic Community.

The attempt to do just that is what broke down the Four Power negotiations and precipitated the cold war. For the cold war is a struggle to bring Germany, Japan, and many other nations into one coalition or the other. It is waged on the fundamental premise that the two alliances must be everywhere in close contact, that everyone must be in one alliance or in the other.

BUT THAT is not necessary, and in fact it is not what is probably going to happen. An agreed division of the classic type could be reached, and could be made to last, only if Russia on the one hand, the English-speaking powers on the other, recognized the right and the utility of many nations for their own security and survival not to enter into either military coalition — but to constitute themselves as buffers and mediators, and indeed as guardians of the balance of power.

This is the missing component in all our previous discussion of how to deal with the cold war—to take as our premise that, as the Times (London) put it last week "the world need not necessarily be divided into two rigid and hostile camps," that "it may be convenient to both sides that certain areas should be allowed to preserve—or made to keep—a kind of neutrality."

AMERICAN public opinion is not, I venture to think, sufficiently aware how strong are the forces, just under the surface of official life, which are in motion all over the Old World in Europe and in Asia toward disentanglement from the two dangerously entangling alliances. I think it not improbable that these forces will gather momentum the longer we and the Soviet Union remain frozen in positions which offer no prospect of escape from the utter devastation of atomic warfare. The human instinct of survival, the national instinct to be independent, will not long tolerate the idea that the fate of mankind is to be determined exclusively in Moscow and in Washington.

The day may come, perhaps not so distantly, when a European statesman, another Canning, will arise to proclaim the doctrine that Russia and America are both of them new great powers, and that the Old World must now be called in to redress the balance of the New.

World Employment

By Marquis Childs

Checks Against Depression

WHILE few Americans are aware of it, this Nation has signed a pledge to maintain full employment. That pledge is contained in articles 55 and 56 of the United Nations Charter.

Childs

All the signers of the Charter agree to promote full employment, higher standards of living and "conditions of economic and social progress." They pledged themselves to do this by taking "joint and separate action in cooperation with the United Nations."

What points this up today is a U. N. report almost totally ignored in this country with the title, National and International Measures for Full Employment." That report, prepared by five distinguished economists, two of them Americans, warns that conditions which could lead to a world-wide depression like that of the early thirties exist today. The report declares that there can be no real and lasting prosperity so long as there is a major unbalance between America and dollar-starved Europe and Asia. The five economists say:

"In recent months, it appears that the decline in activity in the United States has been arrested. Industrial production and employment have both turned upward. We shall not attempt to predict the course of events over the next few months but the essential fact remains that the international scene is clouded with uncertainty concerning levels of economic activity and employment in major industrial countries of the world. That uncertainty can be removed only if governments can assure the world that they are in a position to deal with a recession if it occurs."

THIS IS in marked contrast to the glowing rhetoric about the future of America's economy produced by the President's Council of Economic Advisers at the first of the year. The conservative London Observer called the U. N. report "an intellectual atomic bomb."

One of the first effects of the depression that began with the stock market crash of 1929 was that each country immediately began to try to export its unemployment. That is to say tariff barriers were raised to keep out competing foreign goods while nations tried to dump their own products at low prices. Here at home Herbert Hoover signed the disastrous Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act even though he was privately opposed to it.

The U. N. report contains recommendations intended to prevent that from happening in a future crisis. The chief proposal is for a compensatory system that would, theoretically at least, operate even in a relatively mild recession such as occurred in this country last year.

In elementary terms, here is how it would work in relation to the 1949 recession. That recession caused a sharp decline in the volume of imports coming into this country while at the same time the level of exports remained high. Under the system proposed in the U. N. report, the United States would have had to deposit with the World Bank American currency equivalent to the drop in imports as measured against the continuing high level of exports. Then the countries hurt by the fact that this country had shut off their goods would be privileged to go to the World Bank and with their currencies buy the United States dollars. With those dollars they could then get the commodities they needed in the world market.

This sounds complicated. Actually it is very simple; probably so simple and so effective that it never will be adopted. But the U. N. report flatly warns:

"We can envisage no satisfactory solution to the world full-employment problem and no real improvement in the world trading system unless the chronic dollar shortage is attacked at its root."

AS TO the "joint and separate action" pledged by America and the other U. N. signatories, there is little evidence of any action either present or contemplated in this country. At the same time, certain signs indicate that quite apart from the dollar unbalance, the picture at home is not all roses and rhapsody.

The Federal Reserve Board reported the other day that consumer credit was at an all-time record high of $18,788,000,000. The total jumped 2½ billion dollars in 1949, and 978 million dollars in December alone.

What is disturbing to officials responsible for fiscal policy is that this is taking place in a period of high—virtually full—employment. There is the suspicion that present levels are being maintained by the expanding credit balloon on the one hand and by hidden Government subsidies on the other hand.

An example of the latter is the rapid rise in payments under the GI Bill. The benefits are going in considerable part, it is believed, to the unemployed or partially employed.

Preparation now for measures that could check a decline is imperative. The free world will not long remain free if anything like the spreading debacle of 20 years ago gets started.

Press Group Nominates

Two newspapermen and a radio broadcaster will run for the presidency of the Montgomery County Press Association in elections at the group's March meeting.

Nominated are Roger B. Farquhar, editor of the Record of Montgomery County, Louis M. Leimbach, Rockville Sentinel general manager, and Ernie Tannen, WGAY's "Community Reporter."

Truman Sees Moral Law as Crime Remedy

President Truman yesterday called for an emphasis on religion as well as laws in opposing 'the resurgence of underworld forces" that has come since World War II.

"The fundamental basis of this Nation's law was given to Moses on the mount," Mr. Truman said in addressing the Attorney General's Conference on Law Enforcement Problems at the Justice Department.

"The fundamental basis of our Bill of Rights comes from the teachings which we get from Exodus and St. Matthew, from Isaiah and St. Paul. I don't think we emphasize that enough these days.

"If we don't have the proper fundamental moral background, we will finally wind up with a totalitarian government which does not believe in rights for anybody except the state."

Increase in Crime

The Chief Executive admitted that there had been a substantial increase in crime in the United States. This was disturbing, he he said, but added that it was the one of the inevitable results of war.

He noted that there had been such an increase after the Revolutionary War and the "War Between the States or the Civil War." He reminded his audience that, after this latter conflict, his own State of Missouri was famous for some of its bandits.

"We had the same situation after World War I," Mr. Truman continued. "We had a terrible time then, with the increase in crimes of violence. We managed to handle the situation, and I am just as sure as I stand here that we will do it again.

"Underworld Resurgence"

"This postwar increase in crime has been accompanied by a resurgence of underworld forces—forces which thrive on vice and greed. This underworld has used its resources to corrupt the moral fiber of some of our citizens and some of our communities . . .

"This is a problem that, in one degree or another, affects every community in the country, and every level of the Government . . .

"It is important, therefore, that we work together in combating organized crime in all its forms. We must use our courts and our lay enforcement agencies, and the moral forces of our people, to put down organized crime wherever it appears.

"At the same time, we must aid and encourage gentler forces to do their work of prevention and cure. These forces include education, religion, home training, family and child guidance, and wholesome recreation.

"The most important business in this Nation—or any other nation, for that matter—is raising and training children. If those children have the proper environment at home, and educationally, very, very few of them ever turn out wrong. I don't think we put enough stress on the necessity of implanting in the child's mind the moral code under which we live."

Mr. Truman said that everything should be done to protect the minds and hearts of children from the moral corruption that accompanies organized crime. He added:

"We must not permit the existence of conditions which cause our children to believe that crime is inevitable and normal. We must teach idealism—honor, ethics, decency, the moral law.

"Because It's Right"

"We must teach that we should do right because it is right, and not in the hope of any material reward. That is what our moral code is based on: do to the other fellow as you would have him do to you. If we would continue that all through our lives, we wouldn't have organized crime . . ."

The President put in a blow for one plank in his civil rights program, fair practices in employment.

"Above all," he said, "we must recognize that human misery breeds most of our crime. We must wipe out our slums, improve the health of our citizens, and eliminate the inequalities of opportunity which embitter men and women and turn them toward lawlessness. In the long run, these programs represent the greatest of all anti crime measures.

Equal Opportunity

"And I want to emphasize particularly equality of opportunity. I think every child in the Nation, regardless of race, creed or color, should have the right to a proper education. And when he has finished that education, he ought to have the right in industry to fair treatment in employment. If he is able and willing to do that job, he ought to be given a chance to do that job, no matter what his religious connections are, or what his color is."

The Chief Executive told the law enforcement officers that they had great responsibilities as well as great powers.

"Too often," he said, "organized crime is made possible by corruption of law enforcement officials."

Mr. Truman emphasized, too, that the guilty as well as the innocent are entitled to fair treatment from the police and a fair trial from prosecutors and judges.

He concluded by telling the conference that their task was only beginning with yesterday's meeting.

"The spade work," he said, "must be done in the communities where you live and work. It will be your task to mobilize local opinion and resources against organized crime and the conditions which create it."

Mayors in Fight Against Crime . . .

ON THE SIDE OF THE LAW—Two mayors and the attorney general get together to discuss the fight against organized crime. They are (from left) Mayors de Lesseps S. Morrison of New Orleans and W. Cooper Green of Birmingham, Ala., and Attorney General J. Howard McGrath. Morrison, speaking for the American Municipal Association, told a conference of top-ranking law enforcement officials that "there are two major criminal syndicates operating in America today" erward that he hopes for Judiciary Committe approval Monday, and Senate sanction soon after. He said it would take about a month to do the preliminary committee work, with another month needed for hearings.

Action Favored

Like, Kefauver, the crime conference delegates were in favor of action by Congress at this session. McGrath also expressed hope for action at this session.

But McGrath made it perfectly clear he does not want any buck-passing by the cities and States to the Federal Government, ending in "laws which will bring back a prohibition era." He hinted broadly that a lot more press and radio publicity to the tygoons is necessary to put public support behind any new national drive on the rackets.

"It will take fertile minds and strong backs to plan and disseminate a campaign of persuasive education, which will interpret for the public the work you officials are undertaking to do," McGrath told the delegates. "Until the psychology of our people is so affected with an abhorrence of the kind of crime we are seeking to eliminate, high-minded public officials will continually be fighting an uphill battle."

The conference's permanent machinery will be a continuing committee of two representatives of each of the groups attending and others in the same field, with Denver's Mayor Quigg Newton as chairman. A legislative committee, which will study and work over the resolutions referred to it, will be headed by Baltimore's Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro, jr.

The first committee was told to "make such reports as are feasible" by April 15, and the second to make a "definitive" report "by such time as the present Congress may consider it."

The open session at the Justice Department heard President Truman and McGrath. Then the group, including a dozen or more of the United States attorneys who are meeting here from all over the Nation this week, went into closed session.

McGrath said the modern version of the Prohibition-day mobster "combines the worst features of big business manipulations with violence and corruption to clamp a monopoly or monopolies on the illegal businesses of bookmaking, slot machines, 'policy' or the numbers game and other forms of commercialized gambling" which cost the American public "billions of dollars, and threaten to make a mockery of respectable local self-government."

He called organized gambling "the biggest illicit traffic since prohibition," and said "gambling as a private business cannot operate on its present gigantic scale without corrupting all that it touches."

Washington Attitude

While McGrath pointed out that public policy throughout the country "condemns organized gambling and makes its activities criminal" in almost all States, the Justice Department has no desire to "usurp the functions of the State and local police or to conduct activities that extend beyond constitutional limitations or the usages of our people." He added:

"Conditions which breed contempt for law can only become worse if we allow ourselves to be lured away from sound principal by the temptation to pass off State and municipal responsibilities to the Federal Government."

Instead, said McGrath, there is a need for modernized local laws, perhaps for new interstate compacts. Then, he said, "if it is found Federal legislation is needed, we must take care that we do not recommend laws which will bring back a prohibition era."

Fiery Mayor Talks

The conference got its biggest dish of specifics on interstate crime from New Orleans' fiery Mayor DeLesseps Morrison who acted as spokesman for the American Municipal Association, the leader in the call for yesterday's conference and for Federal legislation.

Morrison told the gathering of the now well known operations in Louisiana (outside the New Orleans city limits) of Frankie Costello who, he said, is believed to control a Nation-wide slot machine syndicate.

This syndicate, Morrison said, is one of "two major criminal syndicates" operating in the Nation. The second "dominates the racing wire service." Continental Press Service is the principal service and "the key to the multi-billion-dollar betting business," he said.

Inter-State Gambling

Morrison declared inter-state gambling represents "the last major area of big profits from illegal enterprise in which the jurisdiction of the Federal Government has not been extended . . ." Here, he said, Federal action is needed "not to invade home rule, not to centralize police power, but to move into a field that needs its help."

Morrison listed 10 proposals, all of which now will go to the committees for consideration.

In addition to bans on slot machine and race wire transmission across State lines, he asked for a confidential quarterly report from the Attorney General, a coordinated master plan of action with the Attorney General as "coordinator," support of the Kefauver resolution, registration of gambling device owners who pay internal revenue taxes.

He also recommended extension of FBI jurisdiction for more help to local officials, tightening of immigration rules, continuing tax investigation of racket bosses inspection by local officials of tax records of known police characters and former convicts and intercity cooperation.

TWA TWA TWA

One on the Aisle—

All That Fuss, and The Thing Is Dull

By Richard L. Coe

"STROMBOLI"—and you pronounce it not like that radio Frankenstein's "Boly," but "STROM-boli"—commits the cardinal entertainment sin. It's dull.

So unless you have time and money to burn, skip "It," as Keith's refers to the new 15th st. feature.

Its dullness is fatuous, pretentious and foolish. What you have here is a picture filmed in Italy by Italians for the American market. While this would seem a good idea, its very virtues become its flaws.

The story concerns a Czech DP woman (Ingrid Bergman) of vaguely shadowy past who, in order to get out of her displaced status in an Italian DP camp, marries an Italian fisherman who promises to take her to his lovely island in the south.

This turns out to be lonely, volcanic STROM-boli. The woman proves a very unhelpful wife. She makes eyes at a lighthouse keeper and makes a slight, unasked for pass at the village priest. Pregnancy softens her a bit, but after her understandably oafish husband has barricaded her in the house, she breaks out with the lighthouse lad's help and sets off for a village on the other side of the island. This means she has a rough time crossing the volcano area (it burbles throughout the picture). Finally she goes home to her husband and a mighty dim future. End of the picture.

All the speaking is in English and many excuses are given as to how it happens that a Czech girl and people living on an Italian island insist on exchanging ideas in basic English. One line for the American trade comes from the husband when he tells the wife how much money he got for his fishing take: "30,000 lira, almost 40 dollars."

Another ludicrous moment comes when the barricaded bride shouts to the lighthouse lad on the beach that her husband has locked her up. The l. l. shouts back: "Why he do that?"

Again, the wife complains to the priest about her Italian-speaking husband: "His English is so poor. I have to speak to him as a child."

Rossellini Repudiates Film

Ever so often, for no particular reason, a narrator takes over and tells you what's going on in semidocumentary style. There also is a slight touch of the travelogue, with scenes of tuna fishing and hints of island customs. You get the feeling that sooner or later Fitzpatrick will take over and do his so-we-say-goodby act.

In a Rome interview the other day, Director Roberto Rossellini took the trouble to completely repudiate the picture. He claimed RKO has changed the picture and made such cuts in it "that the film is no longer mine."

Just how drastically the picture has been hurt by studio operations would be presumptuous to say, but the real flaw is certainly the spoken nonsense, which is basic. Rossellini's skill in the past has given the Italian films real stature, and for the director not to have had a hand in the cutting and final shape certainly puts him at a disadvantage.

Marred on Purpose

This, of course, opens up the question as to whether the film has been purposely marred. Such indeed would be the most potent reprimand Miss Bergman and Rossellini could receive, although whether the studio would risk its financial investment is another factor.

Miss Bergman's work is uneven. In her good scenes she is at her luminous best. But all too often the cutting, the brief scenes, the irrational way she is made to treat her husband and her lines themselves find her foundering. The balance of the cast are Italian natives, self-conscious and often unintelligible.

It's a pity that many people who never go to foreign-made pictures will be drawn into this by the Rossellini-Bergman names and will think that this flat, drab, inept picture is what they've been missing. If the Hollywood system had it in mind to make mockery of the good repute European pictures have created, this picture does that job with uncanny accuracy.

Jorge Bolet And Mitchell Formidable

By Paul Hume

Howard Mitchell and Jorge Bolet proved again last night to be a formidable combination.

Last summer the former classmates at Curtis Institute honored their alma mater in playing Franck and Liszt at the Watergate. Their winter collaboration before the National Symphony's weekly audience in Constitution Hall was in the third concerto of Rachmaninoff.

It was the first time this music was played by our resident orchestra. There is no logical reason for the third concerto coming so far after the second on our platforms. Melodic contours and rich harmonic background are common to both.

The third is more subtle in its attack on our emotions, but no less thorough. It is also harder to play. Bolet has a broad technique and deep feeling for the lyrical moments. Any pianist must stand up against the composer's own titanic account of these concertos, for Rachmaninoff played them often and matchlessly.

Bolet, seconded at every point by Mitchell's most sensitive accompaniment, made the concerto a noteworthy addition to the season and the repertoire. He understated passage work, but in solo phrases won himself a prolonged ovation.

Before intermission Mitchell played one of the rare accomplishments of our century in Paul Hindemith's symphony, Mathis der Maler. The three movements are drawn from the opera by that name.

The orchestra sounded at its best in the celestial writing. The woodwinds and brass were of noble character. The subtlety of which the National Symphony constantly becomes more capable was clear throughout the music. But in climaxes there was a real need for 10 more strings. The winds blanketed them. Director please note.

The program opened with Mitchell's fine account of Beethoven's third Leonore Overture. Next week Paul Calloway, conducting chorus and soloists in the Verdi Requiem.

Claire's Nice, But Film's A Weakling

By Orval Hopkins
Post Reporter

SOMEBODY seems to have got hold of half an idea for "Borderline," now at the Capitol, and then let the other half get away. That somebody would have to be William Seiter and Milton H. Bren, who, respectively, directed and produced the movie.

The half an idea which reached the screen was the one that called for a pretty young woman to be sent to Mexico with the intention of putting the official finger on a narcotics crook. The other half, the half that got away, we shall never know about.

Claire Trevor plays the lady cop sent to Mexico. There she meets Fred MacMurray, who is not only also a cop but also is trying to throw the loop on the same narcotic thief. She doesn't know he is a flatfoot—thinks he's a dope smuggler. He doesn't know she is a ff—thinks she's a d.s. But you, the suffering audience, know all about it and you know there's only one way for it to turn out, and you wonder, if you're like me (not an entirely cheerful thought) what all the shooting's about.

Well, it turns out just that way, and despite some gunplay, a chase and a curious airplane ride, the movie never succeeds in getting up on its feet. Miss Trevor is an enthusiasm of mine and I'm still enthusiastic. They ought to give her better work to do. MacMurray is—well, he's MacMurray, I guess.

The stage bill is headed by Dave Apollon, the international entertainer. He introduces a fellow who does some amazing yodeling. Also on the bill are Sara Ann McCabe, a plump young singer; Cy Reeves, the comedian, and Pat Hill and Larry Delma, puppeteers. In my opinion, the latter two gentlemen would do well to take up something else.

The newsreel has some shots of Colleen Townsend, the lassie who says she is giving up the movies to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. I honestly hope for the young lady's own sake that this isn't just a gag somebody sold her.

Howard Group Does Well by A Dated Play

ERNST Toller was a German playwright of the between-wars period, and having seen none of his plays I was interested in the Howard University Players' revival of his "No More Peace."

This anti-war fantasy, which has a few songs with lyrics by W. H. Auden and music by Herbert Murrill, is decidedly of that 1920-30 generation. Under the nagging limitations of their improvised theater, the Howard Players are giving it a workmanlike production which will run through Saturday evening.

Toller alternates his scenes between Olympus and a small European city he calls Dunkelstein. On Olympus, which seems to be heaven, you watch Napoleon and St. Francis playing chess and arguing about those foolish human beings below who seem to prefer a state of war to a state of peace. On a bet, they inform Dunkelstein a war is on. Not even Socrates can stop the waste and carnage. It takes a wily female angel to strike a peace deal.

While there is both lightness and depth to Toller's treatment, one has the gnawing feeling that this is like rereading the papers of that fated era. One is against war, yes. But Toller can go no further than his effort at whimsy. There is, if you will, an innocence about "No More Peace" that's a trifle sad. And, after a spell, his fantasy device wears thin.

George Johnson is effectively humorous as a wise citizen called Noah and there are nicely gentle performances from Edward Hall, as St. Francis, and Carol Foster, as the obliging angel. Norman Fitz is Napoleon. R. L. C.

Rossellini Says Changes Made His 'Stromboli' Meaningless

Rome, Feb. 15 (NYHT).—Roberto Rosselini said tonight he wished to "repudiate the paternity" of the version of the film "Stromboli" which went on exhibition in the United States today.

The director said he believed the version of the picture being shown in the United States had been edited to eliminate a strong religious aspect of the story, leaving a film of little moral or artistic merit.

Rosselini said he agreed with the Catholic Legion of Decency in its protest about advertising for the film, which shows Ingrid Bergman, mother of Rosselini's illegitimate child, emerging in a passionate embrace from the cone of the volcano, Stromboli. He said the advertising was "laughable" and that it had nothing to do with the film.

Rosselini added that his lawyers are investigating the possibility of action against RKO-Radio Pictures for changes in the original version.

Persons hoping to profit from the film have attempted to "tie it to the scandal which has formed itself about us," Rosselini said.

He said that so far as he had been able to learn, the American distributors had clipped out the sections intended to describe the herine as a typical modern post-war rationalist who gradually succumbs to a belief in God. The rest of the film, describing a life of a woman who had been almost a prostitute, would make him look like an imbecile if used without the religious part, Rosselini protested.

Maryland Assembly Decides Not to Act

By a Post Reporter

Annapolis, Feb. 15.—The Maryland General Assembly is not going to give Ingrid Bergman its "official frown."

A resolution asking a joint boycott by both Maryland movie houses and patrons of "Stromboli" or any other film in which Ingrid Bergman appears or which Roberto Rossellini directs is going to be "held" in the House Education Committee. That body decided today that it would be better not to report the resolution out than to bring it up for discussion by the full House.

Before the committee, Mrs. Rose Marie Murphy, delegate from Baltimore and a housewife, explained why she dropped the resolution in the hopper:

"Teenagers today are asking their parents so many questions they aren't able to answer. They'd go to see that picture where they wouldn't go anywhere else. I'm wondering what their thoughts would be."

Said Mrs. Leona M. Rush, delegate, of Montgomery County:

"The thing you prohibit is most attractive. It's the mother's job to straighten a child's thinking. If you can't do that, it's your problem."

Said Francis X. Dippel (D., Baltimore), "I can't see how the private life of Miss Bergman should affect her pictures if she is considered as an artist. A lot of artists are communistic, perverted and anything else, and you don't do anything about it because it's their private lives."

Rota Judge Asserts Couple Live in Sin

Rome, Feb. 15 (U.P.).—A judge of the Sacred Rota, high court of the Roman Catholic Church, said today the ease of actress Ingrid Bergman and Italian Director Roberto Rossellini was "that of two persons living publicly in adultery."

The statement, by Msgr. Dino Staffa, also said an Italian civil court's action in its annulling Rossellini's previous marriage violated the lateran pacts regulating Italo-Vatican relations.

Military Chiefs Economies Hit

The committee questioned "how much of this piece-meal destruction of the Marine Corps is attributed to certain elements in the armed forces which bitterly opposed the assigned role of the Marine Corps in the National Security Act of 1947."

Next, the committee charged the President and Secretary of Defense with "arbitrarily reallocating the appropriations granted by Congress for a 70-group Air Force. As a result the Air Force today is having difficulty clinging to 48 groups and has been forced to curtail its tactical air arm so vital to the support needs of the Army Ground Forces," Grobsmith said.

Another example where the "intention of Congress" was thwarted, the committee asserted, was in the cancellation of the prototype of the "modern naval carrier by a 2 to 1 vote of the Joint Chiefs of Staff" after Congress appropriated funds for the construction of this vessel.

The committee statement concluded, "The VFW intends to request Congress to look beyond the statements of the Secretary of Defense who contends that economy is being accomplished without sacrifice to our national defense, lest our whole defense structure proves little more than a house of cards when the hour of need arrives."

At a dinner last night at the Statler Hotel, General Omar Bradley—"the G. I.'s General"—was twice honored by the VFW, first as a distinguished citizen, and then for making the "most outstanding contribution to national security."

Members of Congress who served in the armed forces were guests at the dinner and joined VFW officers, committees and State commanders in a loud ovation for the five-star general who is now chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

VFW Commander-in-Chief Clyde A. Lewis presented the organization's highest award—"Gold Distinguished Citizenship Medal"—to General Bradley for his "outstanding leadership as a citizen of the United States in those affairs that bore directly on the safety of our Republic."

Lewis then asked General Bradley for permission to name a new VFW annual award the "Omar N. Bradley Award Medal." The award will go to veterans, personnel of armed services and war correspondents for the "most outstanding contribution to national security."

The General agreed and Lewis promptly presented a citation for the first medal to Bradley for his efforts on furthering national defenses and "your inestimable service in welding the armed forces into an efficient fighting team."

The VFW head then told the General, that as head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff "without bluster or fanfare, you went about the arduous task of coordinating our military team to meet a possible aggressor."

General Bradley, without mentioning the criticism of the VFW national legislative committee, pointed out that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have no military command to provide the liasion between a civilian Secretary of Defense and the professional armed services.

Earlier, VFW committees hailed the State Department stand opposing World Federation and Atlantic Union now urged development of atomic weapons and the H bomb as a defensive measure only; opposed recognition of Red China and continuance of Selective Service as an independent agency.

Navy Drafts Plans for Big Flush-Deck Carrier to Handle Its Modern Planes

ning July 1, 1951—now under preparation—the Navy itself voluntarily eliminated the project.

Instead, the new carrier has been tentatively slated for inclusion in the budget for the following year.

Top naval officials are convinced that flush-deck carriers ultimately are absolutely necessary if round-the-clock, all-weather fight operations are to be maintained at sea with the newer airplanes.

But they are said to have concluded that any request for funds for a new carrier—even though smaller than the USS United States— would be viewed by Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and the Army and Air Force members of the Joint Chiefs as tantamount to asking for a reversal of the decision of last May, canceling the big flattop.

The argument for the smaller, flush-deck carrier, however, is that longer range planes—capable of meeting land-based jet planes on somewhat even grounds—are essential. They, it is said, would permit carrier tasks forces to lie so far at sea while their planes attack Navy targets ashore that unescorted enemy shore-based bombers could not attack the fleet. The admirals feel their own fighters can defend the ships against bombers, without escorts.

Flush-deck carriers also will be necessary in the future as aircraft continues to grow larger, it is said, if flight operations in bad weather or at night are to be carried on with safety.

'Big Mo' to Become School Ship for Navy

The giant battleship Missouri—on whose decks the Japs surrendered their empire—will become a school ship for midshipmen and naval reservists.

Placing the Navy's only active battleship in "reduced commission" will halve the annual $6,700,000 operating cost of the "Mighty Mo," Defense Secretary Louis Johnson said, and enable the Navy to keep another aircraft carrier in service next year.

The announcement came as the vessel headed out of Norfolk on a cruise to Guantanamo, Cuba., after four weeks aground in Hampton Roads and two weeks rehabilitation.

Most Navy men considered it was President Truman's personal affection for the vessel which was largely responsible for keeping her with the fleet this long.

34% Increase In Net Shown By State Loan

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of State Loan & Finance Corp., Washington, reached a new peak of $556,952 in 1949, President Davis Weir reported yesterday. This was an increase of 34 percent over the 1948 net of $416,134.

Volume of loans made and loans receivable also set new records for the finance firm whose headquarters are in the Ring Building and which operates 32 offices in eight States.

Total volume of loans last year amounted to $24,403,935 made to 101,063 borrowers. This compared with $16,941,115 to 71,999 borrowers in 1948.

Loans receivable on December 31, 1949, aggregated $13,472,220, an increase of $3,789,237 over the same date in 1948.

Net per share, Weir added, totaled $1.60 on the 257,562 shares of Class A and B common stocks outstanding at the end of 1949. This compared with $1.93 a share net in the previous year on 167,263 outstanding shares. During the past year, many preferred shareholders exercised their right to convert into common stock because of the higher dividend rate.

Directors of State Loan yesterday declared dividends of 37½ cents a share on the 6 percent cumulative preferred and the 6 percent convertible preferred stocks, and dividends of 25 cents a share on the Class A and B common stocks. All dividends are payable March 15 to stock of record March 1.

TRIBUTE: More than 90 colleagues paid tribute to Edward L. McAleer, past president of the D. C. Building and Loan League at a testimonial dinner last night in the Shoreham Hotel. Fred A. Smith, chairman of the fete and current league president, led a number of guests in eulogizing McAleer who responded with some humorous fish stories. A gavel and other gifts were given to him. Among those present were a group of Baltimore savings-loan leaders and William K. Divers, J. A. Adams and O. K. LaRoque, officers of the Home Loan Bank Board. Among the complimentary letters read was one from C. Clinton James, general counsel of the League, who is recuperating at Doctors Hospital.

GAS SALES UP: January gas sales of Washington Gas Light Co. totaled 20,441,134 therms, an increase of 4.16 percent over the 19,624,084 in the same 1949 month. The increase came in the face of warmer temperatures this year and was attributed to more customers and heavier load.

Trial of Christoffel Adjourns to Monday

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

The perjury trial of Harold Christoffel was adjourned yesterday until Monday after Judge F. Dickenson Letts had remarked that it was being conducted "in chapters."

Several times before, the trial has been adjourned briefly because witnesses or documents or both were not available. Yesterday's adjournment was for the purpose of attempting to locate Mrs. J. Roy Israel, whom the defense wishes to subpena. She was reported in San Diego, Calif.,

Christoffel, former president of the UMW-CIO local at the Allis-Chalmers plant in Milwaukee, is charged with lying when he told the House Labor Committee on March 1, 1947, that he was not a Communist.

He was convicted last year, but the finding was set aside by the Supreme Court, which ruled that the prosecution had not shown a quorum of the committee to have been present when Christoffel testified.

Former Committee Chairman Fred Hartley, recalled to the stand yesterday, testified that his committee did not always maintain a quorum during hearings.

Examining Hartley on the basis of photographic copies of committee minutes, Defense Counsel O. John Rogge asked if a quorum had been present February 15, 20, 24 and other dates when Christoffel testified. Hartley conceded there was no quorum on those days.

"Do you want to correct your previous statement (made two weeks ago) that you always had a quorum present?" Rogge asked.

"I do not," replied Hartley. "I said before there may have been exceptions. It is obvious from the record that a quorum was not present all the time. This committee met for weeks."

Truman Plans Stump Fight shape" now than it was at election time in 1948.

"It's up to the party's representatives now to take the President's program to the people," Boyle said. "We're confident, but not overconfident."

Boyle and Charles Luckman, chairman of the Jefferson-Jackson dinner, announced in a statement that the dinner had been sold out Monday. Overflow tables had been arranged for, they said, but space in the National Guard Armory is now exhausted.

President Truman is scheduled to talk for a half hour, beginning at 10:30 p. m. All major radio networks will broadcast the speech. The television networks of the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Co., working on a pool basis, will cover the dinner from the floor and the balcony, starting at 10:15 p. m.

Barkley, Rayburn to Speak

Vice President Barkley and Speaker Rayburn will speak ahead of Mr. Truman.

The armory doors will open at 6:15 p. m., and guests will be expected to take their seats at 7 p. m.

A corps of 550 waiters and 75 Captains will be employed. Some of the food will be delivered early today, but the hot food will be rushed to the armory just before the dinner. It will be prepared at the Mayflower and the Statler, and taken to the armory in charcoal ovens.

Spingarn Takes Oath as Special Aide to Truman

Stephen J. Spingarn yesterday was sworn in as a special assistant to President Truman. The job pays $15,000 a year.

Spingarn, a 41-year-old lawyer, succeeds Charles S. Murphy, who recently was promoted from special assistant to special counsel to the President. He has been at the White House for a year, serving as an assistant to the special counsel.

A native of Bedford, N. Y., Spingarn attended Philips Academy at Exeter, Mass.; Yale University(two years), Grenoble University in France, and got his A.B. and law degrees at the University of Arizona.

He joined the legal staff of the Treasury in 1934, just after leaving law school. In 1942 he was commissioned as an Army intelligence officer. He served in Africa, Italy and Austria, and was awarded the Legion of Merit and the Bronze Star. Returning to the Treasury, he served as special assistant to the general counsel until he joined the White House staff.

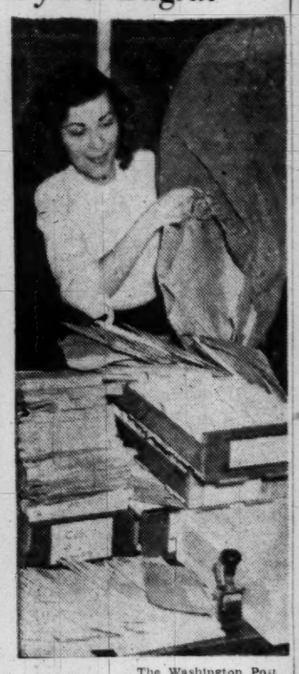
Salary Reports By the Bagful



The Washington Post
MRS. GLORIA LOWE of 1116 Mount Vernon blvd., Alexandria, Va., an employe of the District Income Tax Division, empties one of many mail bags full of returns filled out by Washington businessmen reporting salaries paid to their employes.

Tax Officials Say New Policy Is Effective

The District's new policy of requiring employers to submit statements of income paid employes living in the District is making honest people out of former non-taxpayers.

Apparently alarmed because tax officials now have their names and amount of 1949 income, they've been showing up in droves in recent weeks at the District income tax office, officials said, to settle past accounts.

R. J. Dunham, assistant administrator of the Income and Franchise Tax Division, said $36,000 in past taxes were paid in January. Business has been even heavier this month, he said. The District receives about $4,500,000 a year from the tax.

Dunham attributed the sudden activity to the new regulation, under which employes furnish the District lists of earnings of employes whom they paid more than $1000 in 1949.

By yesterday's deadline, the District had received statements on about 200,000 employes. Dunham expects the figure to go over 250,000 with today's mail and reports from firms which asked time extensions. These figures compare with about 130,000 individual returns filed last year, Dunham said.

Average U. S. Life Span Rises To 67.2 Years

The average length of life in the United States has increased to 67.2 years, the highest figure on record, the Federal Security Agency announced yesterday.

The agency's office of vital statistics based its caluculation on 1948 mortality figures. The 1947 average life was 66.8 years.

The agency also reported that the decline in the death rate since 1940 has been greatest—more than 40 percent—for children from 1 to 4 years of age.

It is still comparatively high—35 out of 1000—for infants under 1 year, compared with the 9.9 in 1000 for all ages, 1.6 for children 1 to 4, and 0.7 for ages 5 to 14.

Death rates for other age groups: 15-24, 1.4; 25-34, 2; 35-44, 4; 45-54, 9; 55-64, 19.4; 65-74, 44; 75-84, 96.3; 85 and over, 247.1.

"Beginning with the age decade 35-44, the declines in the death rate since 1940 grow smaller with advancing age," the agency said.

"In every age group the death rates for males are higher than those for females, and except for the age groups over 75, they are higher for the nonwhite population than for the white population."

Of 1,444,337 deaths in 1948, 113,169 were among infants under one year.

The other categories exceeding 100,000 deaths were: 55-59 years, 114,618; 60-64, 138,445; 65-69, 159,401; 70-74, 170,510; 75-79, 164,267; 80-84, 125,930.

There were 8,612 deaths of children a year old, 4256 2-year-olds, 3302 3-year-olds, 2645 4-year-olds, 8671 in the range from 5 to 9 years.

At the other end of the scale there were 75,629 deaths in the 85-89 group, 27,170 in the 90-94, and 6042 in the 95-99 years group.

Among persons 100 years or older there were 1363 deaths.

Tri-City Gives Caps Spanking in Grudge Game, 85 to 81; Colonials Nose Out Georgetown for Area Title, 68 to 66

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

IT WOULD have been the upset of the half-century, if that Associated Press poll had come up with any answer other than Mildred (Babe) Didrikson Zaharias as the No. 1 athletic moll of the half century.

Whattababe Didrikson was a shoo-in. It was no contest. She headed her sex by a wider margin than any other athlete elected top of the class for the last 50 years.

POVICH

The only surprising item is that 42 sports-writers among the 361 polled didn't cast their first-place ballots for the Babe. The suspicion is that at the time of the voting they were preoccupied by a rooting interest in the sixth at Hileah.

Nothing quite like the Babe ever flashed across the sports scene. She could run, jump, hurdle, toss a javelin, a baseball and a football. She could swim, ride, shoot, box, play tennis and beat 'em all at golf. She broke four Olympic track records in one day, and just kidding around in a swimming pool she came within only one second of the world record for the 100-yard free style (women's).

SHE THREW such a fright into the men golfers after she began to take up that game seriously, they hurriedly inserted the word "male" in their National Open entry lists to keep her out in 1947.

One week after she decided she'd take a fling at this golf business in 1934, she shot an initial round of 90. Two months later, she was shooting in the 80s. Before a year was up, she was beating her club pro in Texas who had helped teach her the game.

As a warm-up for her assault on the British women's amateur title, she reeled off 18 American tournament victories in a row, and then quit the game for a couple of weeks. Landing in England, she pattered, "It might take me 40 minutes of practice to get back on my game."

Some of the Scotch and English lassies didn't take kindly to the outspoken Babe who predicted she'd win their tournament. She did, wearing corduroy slacks, doing a Highland-fling for the photographers, and otherwise defying the staid, prim traditions of their ladies' game.

THERE WAS catty locker-room gossip about the Babe, who prattled to interviewers that the secret of her game was to "loosen my girdle and swing it," and she also whipped out a harmonica on the final green to celebrate her victory. But she was blandly unaware of her unpopularity with the tournament field until in the dressing room she casually asked:

"Anybody got a cigarette?"

From behind a partition came the retort, "I'd like to get you some arsenic." The Babe suspected then that they didn't like her winning their tournament.

Before she won all those Olympic events at Los Angeles in 1932, Babe was already a famous figure. A year before, in the national women's track meet, she won the team title single-handedly with 30 points. A 22-girl Illinois team finished second. And as a kid in Texas she had won prizes for life-saving and figure skating, and a sports dress she designed won first prize at the Texas State Fair.

AT 35, DIDRIKSON isn't the straight-up-and-down tomboy who came out of Texas in 1932 with a close crop, flat shoes and a high disregard for the feminine fashions of the day. She can wear her hair in a soft curl, swish her skirts and with her nice 5 feet 6 inches is in demand as a model of sports clothes.

A few years ago, a golf writer who knew her when, was gaping at La Didrikson as she sauntered into a country club dressed in the heighth of style and paused to apply her lipstick. Noting his once-over stares, she flung back her head and yah-hed, "Yeah, and underneath, I got on silk."

And it was in Washington a few years back that another record fell to the prowess of Didrikson. She was the first girl ever to be invited to address the Touchdown Club. She told of her early athletic exploits. "I guess, I learned my change of pace when I was about 2½ years old, down home in Texas," she was saying.

"In those days, the volunteer fire department used to park their engine back of our house. We had a big old bull, and I'd tease him into getting mad, and then I'd climb up on the high seat of that fire wagon before he could get to me." And then she added, shyly, "I guess I was just an old tease those days."

Ace Adler's Goal in Last Six Seconds Wins Game

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

George Washington University called on its ace in the hole to beat Georgetown, 68-66, in the last six seconds last night at the Armory for the basketball championship of Greater Washington.

Ace Adler, Colonials' lumbering center, followed a Gene Witkin miss with a snappy layup in the fading seconds to cap a G. W. last-minute rally which overcame a 66-62 deficit.

It was by the same score 10 days ago that Georgetown nosed out G. W.

The Colonials base their title claim on a victory over Maryland. The Hoyas were upset by the Terrapins in their only meeting.

Adler, 6-foot, 4-inch, 225-opunder, was practically the whole show for his team in the last five minutes. He was one of only two regulars left in action during that period, Phil McNiff, Art Cerra and Bud Goglin having fouled out.

He Breaks Up Freeze

With G. W. trailing 66-62, and 2:56 left, Adler interrupted Georgetown's freeze and drew a foul shot in the bargain. He made it.

Lenny Small, a reserve, who has seen very little service for the Colonials, added a free throw and G. W. trailed by two points.

With a minute and 25 seconds left, Gene Witkin, 5-foot-8 pointer on a long set shot, and it was 66-all.

The Hoyas took the ball and again started a freeze, trying to hold the ball until they could take a make-or-break shot in the last seconds.

They Miss Free Throws

In the next frantic four seconds, Frank Alagia of Georgetown and Johnny Moffatt of G. W. drew foul shots. Alagia was the lad who beat G. W. with his field goal in the last 11 seconds of their previous game. This time Alagia missed.

Moffatt, whose steady shotmaking in the second overtime beat Duke for G. W. last Saturday, had his chance, and that, too, was no good. But G. W. had the ball.

Witkin took aim from 5-feet behind the foul circle. The shot was short and to the right of the hoop. But Big Adler, who was all knees and elbows, leaped up. He grabbed the ball and in the same motion banked it in. Only six seconds were left, but enough for the Hoyas to try another shot.

The Colonials had two very hot spurts during the first half, which, at one time, gave them a 28-13 lead. One rally was for 11 points and another for eight

Vance Flies In, Races to Arena, Makes Vital Points

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Gene Vance was a late arrival at Uline Arena last night, but Tri-City Coach Red Auerbach considered it timely indeed.

Vance, with a blazing 10-point performance in the final period, led the visitors to an 85-81 victory over the Caps that couldn't have been any sweeter to Auerbach, former Cap coach.

A disappointing crowd of 2528 turned out for the heralded "grudge" battle.

Vance, former Illinois "Whiz Kid" was talked out of retirement by Auerbach. He was talked into making an airplane trip here, too, even though Red knew he couldn't make more than the second half.

Vanced showed that voluble Red never was wiser. Delayed by bad weather, he finally flew in from Chicago and was whisked to Uline under a motorcycle escort.

His Basket Clinches It

He went into the game late in the third period when Tri-City had a one-point lead, 58-57.

Vance scored the first goal of the final period and went on a dazzling eight-point splurge that carried Tri-City to a 72-64 lead.

Later, when the Caps got within four points, 77-81, Gene drove in and applied the clincher.

Vance's late heroics all but dwarfed the substantial 27-point contribution by another Illinois ace, Duke Eddleman. Eddleman, who never lets his feet get off the floor, gave an uncanny set-shooting exhibition.

In the Don Otten-Jack Nichols duel, Otten outscored the former Cap, 17-11. Otten had more than a few chances to make it a big night but cashed in on only five of his 17 attempts from the floor. Nichols scored four field goals in 10 tries.

"Bones" Has Cool Night

Actually, it was Bones' McKinney night only for a few moments in the third period. That's when he went on a six-point scoring spree that narrowed Tri-City's advantage to 56-53. He left on personals with six minutes to go.

Nonetheless, Bones collected a goodly share of loot. The prize was a shiny new Oldsmobile. At halftime, McKinney had one point when he walked up to the mike for the presentation.

Said Bones, 'I can't be such a great man, shut out at this point. I've been shut out before but tonight won't be one of those nights." It took him 15 shots to bag his three field goals.

It really was Freddie Scolari's night. He tallied 24 points.

Tri-City got even for a 65-62 setback at the hands of the Caps at Moline and made their season record 21-27. The Caps have a 24-28 mark.

Hap Huey Gets 60 Points and That's No Hooey

Elkins, W. Va., Feb. 15 (AP).—Harold (Hap) Huey rolled in 60 points tonight in leading Davis and Elkins to a 100-71 basketball triumph over Morris Harvey.

The six-foot-five-inch sharpshooter's total, garnered on 25 field goals and 10 straight free throws, was exactly the number of points scored by George King, Morris Harvey's ace and the Nation's leading scorer.

Davis and Elkins, winning its twelfth start in 13 West Virginia Conference games, held a 16-11 lead at the end of the first quarter and was ahead 43-27 at halftime.

Longwood Prep registered its eleventh victory in 13 starts by downing the Anacostia Naval Air five, 67-55, at Anacostia last night.

Lakers' 'Big 3' Rout Royals

Minneapolis, Feb. 15 (AP).—The "Big Three" of the Minneapolis Lakers totaled 69 points tonight as the home team routed the second place Rochester Royals, 92-70, in a National Basketball Association contest before 8546.

George Mikan scored 34 points, Vern Mikkelsen 21 and Jim Pollard 14 as the Lakers breezed to their twenty-first consecutive win at home. After a slow start, Minneapolis scored 13 straight points in the first period and was never threatened thereafter.

For Rochester, it was the third defeat in its last four games.

Austrian Girl Wins World Slalom Title

By Harold Claasseen

Aspen, Colo., Feb. 15 (AP).—Dagmar Rom, blonde 21-year-old Australian skiing coed, added the women's world slalom crown today to the giant slalom title she won just two days ago.

The slender, red-sweatered ski rider twice wove her way through the 440-yard zigzag course, which has 33 sets of gates and a drop of 495 feet. She skied in almost flawless style and her combined time was 1:47.8.

That gave her a thin margin of one-tenth of a second over her team mate, Ericka Mahringer along a fast course under ideal weather conditions.

Third position went to Italy's Celina Seghi, with Lucienne Schmith-Couttet of France fifth.

Andrea Mead, 18-year-old national champion from Rutland, Vt., was sixth with a combined time of 1:51.7.

Giving 10 points for each first, 6 for second, and 4 for third and so on, Austria leads in the Alpine phase of the current games with 41 tallies.

Italy is second, 15, followed by France with 13, Switzerland with 8 and the United States with 1. Nine countries have yet to register a point.

Holy Cross Wins 21st Straight

Hanover, N. H., Feb. 15 (AP).—Holy Cross' undefeated Crusaders, the Nation's top intercollegiate basketball team, rolled up their twenty-first straight victory by romping over stubborn Dartmouth, 67-50, tonight before a packed 2300 crowd at Alumni Gymnasium.

The Indians managed to bottle up mighty Bob Cousy fairly tight and hold him to 12 points but they left openings through which stocky little Andy Laska darted to gain top individual scoring honors with 20 points.

Century's Top Woman Star? Babe Didrikson—Who Else?

By James F. Fowler

Hollywood, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—On a hot summer day in 1931 some 250 of the Nation's leading women athletes gathered in Evanston, Ill., for the National field and track meet and places on the United States' 1932 Olympic team.

A freckled-faced 19-year-old red head, knit cap perched atop her unruly red hair, sturdy young legs tanned by the Texas sun, stood confidently in the cluster of contestants.

From the opening gun and for the next 2½ hours that amazing miss from Dallas stunned spectators and contestants alike. She swept the meet single handed with seven first places, one tie for first and one second place.

Thus did Mildred (Babe) Didrikson Zaharias ascend the throne as the greatest woman athlete of a half century.

Now, best known as the country's leading professional woman golfer, Mrs. Zaharias glowed when she was told sport editors and writers had selected her as the woman athlete of the half century.

"My gosh," she beamed, "isn't that wonderful! I don't know if I deserve it, but I guess they know what they are doing. I'm thrilled to death!"

"I guess I was proudest when I won the British Women's Open golf championship.

"I WAS TOO YOUNG to realize what I had done in the National field and track meet in 1931. All I was thinking was get all the points I could. I got 14, the largest number of points ever earned by a woman at a track meet.

"Then I went out and danced all night. I sure loved to dance when I was a kid."

Eight months after she first took up tennis she beat Alice Marble and Big Bill Tilden. She could have been a championship swimmer and diver, bowler and soccer player. She out-pitched the great Satchel Page and has played with professional men's baseball teams.

Hoya Frosh Rally to Beat G. W., 79-76

Georgetown reasserted its Freshman basketball supremacy by overcoming a 10-point deficit in the last 4 minutes and nosing out George Washington, 79-76, last night at the National Guard Armory.

It was the fourteenth straight win for the unbeaten Hoya Frosh. They whipped the Colonial Yearlings, 75-63, in an earlier meeting.

The game was nip and tuck all the way, with a 30-30 tie prevailing at intermission. G. W. took the lead in the second half stretching it to 76-66 with 4 minutes left. Then the Hoyas invoked a backcourt press, and Little Bob Makatura stole the ball four times to score field goals.

With the Hoyas trailing, 76-74, and a minute left, Jack Hekker drove in for a layup to tie the score. He was fouled in the bargain, and sank his free throw to give the Hoyas the advantage they needed. G. W. Frosh has a 13-3 record.

Nats Still Hope to Land Dizzy Trout

The Nats still have designs on Detroit Pitcher Dizzy Trout.

That's what Washington club officials said yesterday as they announced sale of Pitcher Paul Calvert to the Tigers for the $10,000 waiver price.

Calvert was offered to the Tigers a week ago in a straight trade for Trout. After first agreeing to the deal, Detroit General Manager Billy Evans changed his mind.

Despite Evans' action, Nat officials are convinced that the Tigers still want to unload Trout.

They pointed out yesterday that Trout has been quarreling with Manager Red Rolfe over Rolfe's decision to continue to use him in relief roles.

Edward B. Eynon, secretary of the Nats, said Calvert was placed on the waiver list because "the club didn't think he would help us next year."

The bespectacled Canadian was signed by the Nats last spring for $6000. He had just been granted amnesty along with the rest of the Mexican League "jumpers" by Commissioner A. B. Chandler. Calvert previously pitched for Cleveland.

It was also announced yesterday that Pitchers Sid Hudson and Joe Haynes and Catcher Al Evans have been withdrawn from the Nats' training schools in Winter Gardens and Orlando, Fla. This was in accordance with Chandler's warning the other day that players may not put on a uniform before March 1.

It was the first outing for the Bullets since they were purchased early this week by a group of Baltimore businessmen.

Worsham Slaps Alexander's Ball, Robs Him of 61

Harlingen, Tex., Feb. 15 (AP).—A couple of course record-tying rounds were turned in today as the huge field warmed up for the $10,000 Rio Grande Valley open golf tournament.

Tom Bolt of Houston and Skip Alexander of Knoxville, Tenn., each turned in a nine-under-par 62.

Alexander laid down his 62 in a practice round playing with Lew Worsham, Oakmont, Pa.; Cary Middlecoff of Ormond Beach, Fla., and Jimmie Demaret of Ojai, Calif.

Skip figured he actually should have had a 61. He was putting for that score and the ball stopped on the lip of the cup on the eighteenth green when Worsham playfully knocked the ball away. It probably would have fallen in had it been left alone. Worsham had 63, Middlecoff 64, Demaret 68.

Boys Will Be Boys in Any Sports Era

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

DOWN THROUGH the years youngsters have been imitating their sports heroes.

But seldom, if ever, has there been a situation to compare with the fad caused by the appearance of Wid Matthews with the Washington Ball Club in the early 1920's

Haight

Wid, a colorful little outfielder and in the news the other day as the new super-scout of the Chicago Cubs, had a gimmick that not only appealed to every kid in town, but amused the older fans as well.

HE HAD a copyright on a method of capturing a fly ball called "The Bread Basket Catch." Wid would cup his hands down by his tummy and the ball would drop into them.

He had played only a few games with the Nats before every kid outfielder, sandlot and high school, was apeing his style.

Youngsters were no different in the heyday of The Little Potatoes, We're Hard to Peel, my boyhood gang.

After Ty Cobb invented the hook slide, we came into bases with our right toe hooking the bag and our right arm outstretched—strictly a la Cobb, regardless of whether there was a play for us.

AFTER DARK, when we gathered under the corner street light, almost invariably we'd take turns hook-sliding into a nearby tree box.

A quarter of a century ago, the Stanton Juniors were the football rave of Washington's preboys club days. They kept a keen eye on the college teams hereabouts.

Maryland University used a clever play on Saturday and the Stanton Juniors employed the same maneuver for their Sunday battle.

Zube Sullivan, Georgetown University tackle, appeared for a local game with both hands heavily bandaged, an innovation at that time. He was the star.

The following afternoon, the Stanton Juniors took the field with the hands of every lineman, from tackle to tackle, bandaged in Sullivan fashion. I'll bet many a mother wondered who had raided the medicine cabinet.

KID MIMICKING, however, is not confined to any era.

For instance, Young David Povich, a chip off our Shirley, invited his Pop to see his football team in action a few years back.

Shirley stopped by the corner lot gridiron.

"Won't be any trouble picking out David," mused the elder Povich, "I recall seeing his mother sew No. 33 on the back of his jersey."

But Shirley was in for a surprise. David wore the No. 33 (Sammy Baugh's number) all right, but so did every boy on the field.

Sportsmen's Show Has Eleven Acts

By Ralph Murdock

A SNEAK PREVIEW of the third annual All-American Sportsmen's and Outdoor Show was given to the radio and press when Leo J. Paulin, show manager, outlined features of the big shindig, which moves into the National Guard Armory Mar. 3.

The get-together was held at the Touchdown Club of Washington, which is co-sponsoring the opening night of the show.

Eleven stage and tank acts will be presented with Brooke Johns serving as master of ceremonies. The show will end on March 12.

Two Washington high school boys had excellent angling luck while fishing at Popes Creek, Va. (not Maryland), when they nabbed 75 yellow perch and 2 pike. The youngsters are Buddy Belfield and Jimmy Johnson. Their success was achieved with bull minnows for bait. Popes Creek, Va., is located about 30 miles past the Morgantown Bridge and empties into the Potomac River.

Several fair catches of pan rock have been made near Key Bridge, where the overflow from the canal empties into the Potomac River. The fish were taken with blood worms.

DELEGATE PAUL CROCKETT of York County, Va., has introduced a bill to prohibit all fishing with commercial devices or hook and line for three quarters of a mile below the Chickahominy River Dam at Walkers.

This is the spot where fishermen have developed quite a sport of catching shad on flies and small spinners. Because of the concentration of fish below the dam, it is by far the best spot—and practically the only spot—where fly fishermen have been successful in catching shad in Virginia.

Hoyas Nosed Out by GW

shot star of last year's G.W. team, regained his form for the first time this season. He slammed in 11 points in the first half as G.W. led, 38-30.

Early in the second half, Bud Goglin, 6-foot,3-inch muscle man, was working in the pivot slow and hooking 'em for the Colonials. They led, 44-37, after three minutes.

Italo Ablondi, the Bronx boy whose sparkling play led Georgetown to its upset of New York U. staged a one-man assault on the basket, scoring four straight points in one spurt and five straigt in another. The Hoyas pulled ahead, 49-48.

It was tied at 41 and 57, before Tommy O'Keefe's layup and three points by John Brown gave the Hoyas a 62-57 lead. Meanwhile, Cerra, McNiff and Goglin had fouled out for G. W.

However, Witkin, demoted to reserve duty only a week ago, and the rest of the scrubs scrapped doggedly until Adler could pull the Colonials out of the soup.

Goglin was chief pointgetter for G. W. with 18 while Ablondi led Georgetown with 16.

The attendance was 2561.

In a preliminary, Radio whipped the Press, 18-14, mainly on Bob (WINX) Wolff's 11 points.

Derby Hopes Fade After Near Spill

Miami, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP).—Maj. Albert Warner's Fighting Fan, purchased only two days ago, fought to a nose victory in the featured Columbiana Handicap at Hialeah today while Kentucky Derby favorites Theory and Oil Capitol failed to place in an overnight sprint.

Fighting Fan, for whom the Hollywood, Calif., movie executive paid $30,000 on Monday, outlasted Calumet Farm's Bewitch by inches in a bitterly-contested stretch duel.

Kinsman Winner

Mrs. James Carson's Kinsman humbled Calumet's highly regarded Theory and Tom Gray's Oil Capitol by capturing the Crandon Purse, a $5000 overnight sprint at seven furlongs, by a length. Janet N. Kelly's Gigolo was second and George D. Widener's Lights Up, another derby prospect, was third.

A near upset probably cost the two derby prospects the race. At the far turn Theory bumped into Oil Capitol after Theory was bumped by another horse.

Harry Trotsek, Oil Capitol's trainer, said he didn't believe his horse had been hurt, but that he would give the 3-year-old grey colt a thorough checking over.

"Theory was bumped by one of the leading horses as he tried to come through a hole," said Trotsek after the race. "My jockey, Kenneth Church, had to pull Oil Capitol so hard he stood in the stirrups to prevent him from falling."

Both Close Up

When the near-accident occurred, Theory was running second and Oil Capitol was third. Gigolo was leading in the field of seven 3-year-olds. Theory and Oil Capitol shared top impost of 124 pounds; the winner carried 112, including Jockey R. J. Martin.

Both are nominated for the $50,000 Flamingo and Kentucky Derby.

Gordon Signs Minus Bonus

Eugene, Ore., Feb. 15 (AP).—Joe Gordon, Cleveland Indians' second baseman, agreed today to terms on a new contract with the American League baseball club.

The stellar ball player, who wanted to step down to the minors so he could play nearer his Eugene home, expressed himself as "very well satisfied" with the contract—though it doesn't give him the release he wanted.

Gordon mentioned no figures. But it was reported that he would receive the same $35,000 salary as last year—minus the bonus clause which brought his last season's salary to an estimated $37,500.

Greenberg turned down Gordon's plea for an unconditional release at the end of next season so that he could play with a Pacific Coast League club.

American Beats Hoya Swimmers

American U. swimmers accomplished something its other sports teams have failed to do through the years—defeat Georgetown U.

The Eagles' tankmen, in their own pool, ran up a 53-22 score last night. Chuck Bailey was the only double winner, taking the 220-yard and the 100-yard free style event. American's medley relay, Captain John Briggs, Lou Cornet and John Hamel, turned in fast time at 300 yards.

Ty Tietje won the 220-yard breast stroke easily for the Hoyas.

Bill Bennings . . .

Dear Folks: The only triple dead heat I can recall in this country was at a New York track. However, at least two have been recorded on Australian courses. Hialeah was very near to a three-way split of first money recently, writes Jimmy Sager, currently vacationing on the Sunny South. It came in a tuff (on the grass) race. Service Pilot was the winner by the scantiest kind of a nose in front of a dead heat for place between Marvin's Tip and Bill Ross. Took a heap of looking through a magnifying glass to separate Service Pilot from the other two. Reminds me of a remark by a politically-appointed official who, after watching four blanket, photo finishes in a row, said, "Why don't somebody tell them boys not to make 'em so close."—Bill

Terps Track Exclusive

THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND'S third annual invitational track meet is such an exclusive affair this year that only 200 spectators will attend.

The College Park armory where the meet takes place Saturday night has seats for only 200. And they have already been spoken for by Terp students.

Eleven schools will be trying to pry Maryland loose from its two-year grip on the meet championship. They are Virginia Military Institute, Wake Forest, North Carolina, Navy, Duke, N. C. State, Washington and Lee, Catholic U., Virginia Tech, William and Mary and Virginia.

Outstanding entrant is North Carolina's Bill Albans, who won the Southern Conference's high and low hurdles and high jump titles. He was a member of the United States Olympic team.

Len Casanova, New Pitt Coach, Will Install T

Pittsburgh, Feb. 15 (AP).—Len Casanova of Santa Clara College became head grid coach at the University of Pittsburgh today and he's bringing a new brand of football for the skyscraper college.

With his coming Pitt's traditional single wing style of playing becomes a thing of the past. Casanova's razzle-dazzle T-formation takes its place.

Casanova replaces Mike Milligan, who resigned suddenly last month upon being offered a new contract on a year-to-year basis only. Milligan has been at Pitt on a three-year agreement since 1947.

No terms were announced but it is certain Casanova is to get more than Milligan's reported $10,000 a year.

Pitt made a decided comeback in Milligan's three-year reign. In his first year the Panthers lost every game but one. In 1948 and 1949, the squad won six and lost three.

Casanova is the school's fifth grid coach since the late Jock Sutherland left in 1938. Athletic prowess since then was hampered by a program of football deemphasis.

But the signing a year ago of Tom Hamilton — formerly in charge of athletics at Annapolis—was considered to be about all Pitt needed to return to the ranks of the football greats.

Oklahoma City, Feb. 15 (AP).—Oklahoma City School officials canceled all intra-city high school basketball games scheduled this season today because of "mob warfare" which followed a game last night.

The officials warned a repetition by teen-agers may further curtail other student activities and said an investigation will be made into the disturbances after last night

A five-day, 40-hour week for Metropolitan, White House and Park Police was proposed yesterday by the advisory and legislative committees of the District Policemen's Association.

If the proposal is accepted by the association's membership, it will go to Congress as suggested legislation.

Under the plan, the existing six-day, 48-hour week would be lowered but without reduction in present wages or benefits.

In urging such legislation, the advisory and legislative committees of the association declared:

1. Legislation already is on the books to give the District Fire Department a five-day, 60-hour week.

Trend Cited

2. Classified employes of the Federal and District Governments work a five-day, 40-hour week.

3. The trend in police departments throughout the country is toward a shorter work week.

4. Policemen of a higher type will be attracted by a shorter work week.

5. There would be fewer retirements for disability and sick leaves under the shorter week.

6. Increased efficiency would reduce the need for additional personnel and a smaller turnover in personnel would cut the tax load.

7. The shorter work week would mean better physically and mentally equipped policemen, and they are needed to cope with the increased population here.

Firemen Get Five-Day Week

The proposal pointed out that District firemen will start a 5-day, 60-hour week six months after Congress appropriates money for additional personnel.

It would be a "gross injustice" if police did not also receive a five-day week, the proposal added.

Police Punched

Roomer Held For Jury on Assault Count

Herschel Bacon, 45, a former steeplejack, yesterday was held in $300 bond for the grand jury charged with assaulting an officer after he charged two policemen entered his room without a warrant and beat him.

Police Pvts. Ernest G. McClanahan and Joseph T. O'Brien, both of No. 10 police precinct went to Bacon's address, 1357 Girard st. nw., February 11 to answer a call that a tenant was fighting with the landlady.

McClanahan testified that as they entered the house, Bacon burst from his room and took a punch at the officers.

He said they attempted to quiet the man but that the latter continued to scuffle, finally aiming a kick at McClanahan's groin. The latter dropped his hand to ward off the blow and suffered a hand injury, he said.

The officer said he was obliged to strike Bacon with his blackjack before the latter would submit.

Bacon's story differed. Under questioning by his attorney, Charles Garlock, he declared he was sitting in his room, the door partly ajar when the officers sought to enter.

He testified he warned them "you can't come in here without a warrant" and that one of the officers replied "we don't need any warrant."

Mrs. Bacon testified that after beating her husband the officers dragged him across the floor and out to the hallway where they awaited a patrol wagon.

In setting bond, Judge Walter J. Casey commented that the defendant would not have been injured if he had not interfered in an affair not concerning him.

Legislators Approve Lane Tax Cut Plan

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 15 (AP).—Governor Lane's income tax program won Senate approval with one minor change today.

Democratic votes beat down three GOP proposals and supported one other for increasing proposed relief to the taxpayer.

These administration measures were approved:

1. A House-approved bill to grant an extra $1000 personal exemption to each taxpayer or his spouse who is at least 65 years old.

The Senate adopted, 17-11, a Republican amendment, in which the House must still concur, to grant a $1000 exemption to dependents who are 65 or older. The cost to the State would be $70,000 under the original bill and another $35,000 under the amendment.

2. A House-approved bill and a companion Senate bill to increase to $600 the present $400 deduction for dependents.

3. A Senate bill to authorize use of the short form and its flat 2 percent rate for incomes up to $10,000 including investment income up to $500. Others would still pay 5 percent on all investment income. The present investment income limit for short forms is $100.

Other Bills Filed

Meanwhile, a proposal to make a radical change in county government by establishing a legislative branch was introduced in the Senate. Also introduced by Senator Turnbull (D., Balt.) was a bill that would provide for a county assembly in addition to commissioners.

If passed, a State-wide vote on changing the constitution would be held this year. Then a referendum would have to be held in each county seeking the assembly form of government.

Under Turnbull's bill, county commissioners would be limited to executive powers, principally supervisory. The county assembly would make the laws, confirm or reject appointments, and adopt the budget. Members would be elected to the county assembly from districts to be defined by the Legislature.

Health Grant Procedure Hit

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 14.—Prince Georges County was cited here today as an example of the direct benefits the State receives through Federal grants for medical research.

Dr. Robert H. Riley, State health director, told a Senate finance committee that the Federal Government uses Maryland as a "guinea pig" for its medical research projects because of the State's proximity to Washington.

"A mental hygiene clinic in operation in Prince Georges County is a demonstration every day that many people who go there for help are kept out of State institutions. Divorces are prevented. Children going to school are put on the right track," Dr. Riley said.

Dr. Riley made his statements as he appeared before the Senate Finance Committee to protest a Sentate bill which would require all State departments to submit requests for Federal matching funds to the budget department, then to the Governor for approval.

He said the proposed requirements, if they were in effect, would have endangered both mental hygiene clinics and State work in tuberculosis, venereal disease and child health.

"We have to go to so many commissions before we get anything done now," said Dr. Riley. "We do manage to get through, but a great deal of our work could be done better if we had lump sum appropriations. Let's not add something more to make our problem more difficult."

Undefeated Clubs Stock Equipment

By Bill Gilbert

OUT AT LANDON School, Coach Harrison Prindle is doing with his soccer team what Frank Leahy does with Notre Dame's football team—win 'em or tie 'em.

This year Prindle's team has won 10 games and tied 2. But undefeated streaks are nothing new to Prindle.

Back in 1936, when Landon first fielded a soccer team, Prindle was the head coach. Except for three and a half years in the Navy as a lieutenant commander in World War II, Harrison has been at the Bethesda school ever since.

Since the organization of the Interstate Athletic Conference in 1938, Landon has won six Conference championships and tied for one. In the District League, organized in 1940 and since disbanded, Landon won four crowns.

SINCE THE WAR, Landon has compiled a record of 41 wins, 6 defeats and 5 ties. This year's team is undefeated in six games in the Conference.

Prindle's best team was his 1948 squad which went through 12 games undefeated and unscored on. His longest undefeated streak was from 1946-1948 when his teams went through 28 games before losing.

Next year will be Prindle's thirteenth at Landon. Just to show he's not superstitious, he will probably schedule 13 games—and win them all.

County Board Urged to Hire More Police

A plan for reorganization of the Arlington County police department, increasing present bureaus from three to five and creating four new lieutenants' positions, has been submitted to the Arlington County board.

No numerical increase in personnel is provided for in the plan, signed by County Manager A. T. Lundberg. It would cost about $1200 for the remainder of this fiscal year, Lundberg said.

Under the plan, the present juvenile bureau would be separated from the detective bureau. A new traffic safety bureau would be created to include the safety patrol and traffic regulations division.

The present record and communications division would be enlarged to an administrative bureau handling all records, communications, identification and training.

The present setup, the report said, suffers from "a lack of line officers." The report notes the police department now "entirely too many men responsible to a single person."

The report also recommends that an additional clerk be hired and that two men be sent to attend training courses on traffic regulation and law enforcement at Northwestern University.

Light Planned Where Boy Met Death

A traffic light will be installed on Lee blvd. at Park Drive, in about 40 days, the Arlington Forest Citizens Association has been informed by State Highway Department officials.

The citizens group has been pushing for a light at the intersection where 12-year-old, Fred Lehman was recently killed.

An additional light will be installed on Lee blvd. at Fillmore st., the group was told Tuesday night in a conference with State officials, according to Clark Isenminger, president.

The two lights will allow the State Department to make further studies of the effect of a proposed string of 8 to 12 lights along the boulevard.

Meanwhile, the State Highway Commission has approved a traffic light at the intersection of Lee Highway and 22nd st and Culpeper st. in the Halls Mill section of Arlington, according to State Delegate J. Maynard Magruder.

Magruder said he will request the Arlington County Board to install the lights at once and seek reimbursement later from the State Highway Commission.

Army's Civilian Ranks Already Cut to Bone, Gray Tells House Unit

The Army has no new plans for a general reduction in its civilian personnel. Secretary Gordon Gray told the House Appropriations Committee:

"I think we have pretty well gotten rid of the fat, and if there are any further reductions then I think that the combat effectiveness of the Army will have been impaired . . . Major economies or major reductions in dollars in the future can only come out of bone and not out of fat."

He added, however, that "we may be able to trim here and there." The Secretary explained that the Army would wipe out 53,000 civilian jobs during this 1950 fiscal year, against a goal of 41,000.

Gray testified he wasn't satisfied with the Army supply program. He implied there were too many supply and procurement offices in the Army. The Secretary has brought in a top-flight businessman to work with the chiefs of the technical services on the problem. He commented:

"We think that is going to result in the elimination of some duplication and overlapping and unnecessary functions, and we think it is being done in a sensible way."

PENTAGON: Civilian employment at Army headquarters here—the so-called departmental staff—would decline slightly under the proposed budget. Maj. Gen. William H. Arnold, the Army's comptroller, testified the 1951 budget would provide for an average employment of 11,953 civilians, as compared with 12,354 for this fiscal year, a reduction of 401.

Arnold's figures didn't include the several thousand Army civilians in "field" offices here and nearby. Personnel cutbacks already have been made in most of these offices as well as those in the Pentagon. A dozen Pentagon offices would get minor increases under the proposed budget.

SAFEGUARD: Civil Service will fingerprint the 20,000 applicants who take its Census clerk and tabulating machine operator examinations on February 18 and March 4. It is being done to prevent applicants from hiring persons to take the competitive tests for them. The commission said it would require fingerprinting in other tests "where it seems useful to do so."

NOTES: The Veterans of Foreign Wars is opposed to the proposed transfer of Selective Service to the Labor Department . . . Blanche V. Kerr was given a $200 cash award for her suggestion to improve indexing of personnel regulations in the Army's Adjutant General's Office . . . Virginia's Barter Theater will stage "Dangerous Corner" tonight at Arlington Farms' recreation hall . . . Daniel Bell will speak at a dinner meeting tonight of the Society for the Advancement of Management, in the YWCA.

BEP: Tentative pay boosts for most of the 4000 clerical-mechanical employes in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were announced yesterday. The bureau's recommendations would become effective the first pay day after they are approved by Treasury Secretary Snyder.

Pay boosts would range from 1 to 23 cents an hour. Rates on a few jobs would be lowered, but the bureau recommended that no present employes be given pay cuts. The bureau's policy is to follow the Government Printing Office on wage rates. GPO is now negotiating pay boosts for many of its employes. So, it's clearly posible that the bureau soon will give their employes another raise.

More than 208 different job descriptions were written for the 4000 employes who were placed in five different levels. In Level 1, the present $1.10 to $1.17-an-hour rate would be raised to $1.18; Level 2, $1.10 to $1.17 and $1.24 to $1.32 would be fixed at $1.28 (a pay cut for some); Level 3, $1.24 to $1.32 and $1.40 to $1.47 would be set at $1.36; Level 4, $1.24 to $1.32 and $1.40 to $1.47 would be set at $1.47, and Level 5, $1.40 to $1.47 would be boosted to $1.57.

Last year's pay-reclassification act took the clerical-mechanical jobs out of the Classification Act and transferred them to the Treasury wage board for salary-fixing purposes. Most of the BEP employes would have received larger pay boosts had they remained under the Classification Act.

Woman, 45, Sprinkles Gasoline on Fire, Dies

Apparently Thought Can Held Kerosene; Companion Jumps Through Window

Alberta Madison, 45, of 318 Brown ct. sw., was burned to death last night when she mistook a can of gasoline for a can of kerosene.

A male companion, Thomas Frederick, 59, of 340 F st. sw., was seriously burned.

Police said Miss Madison was visiting in the second-floor room of Frederick at the F st. address. She had started a fire in a wood stove in the room.

She wanted to get the fire burning more intensely so she picked up what she apparently thought was a can of kerosene and dashed some of the liquid on the fire. It was gasoline.

The gasoline exploded in the woman's face. She died almost instantly.

Frederick suffered first, second and third degree burns to his face and upper torso before he jumped from a second-floor window.

He was taken to Casualty Hospital where his condition was described as "fair."

The fire department received the first alarm of the blaze at 9:11 p. m. Firemen said the fire was confined to Frederick's second-floor room.

Agency Pool To Run D. C. Recommended

A Senate District Committee official yesterday suggested one or more governmental agencies with jurisdiction over metropolitan Washington as a possible solution of some District problems.

Gerhard P. van Arkel, committee counsel, said an area-wide body similar to the Port of New York Authority might be one answer to development of the city and the nearby area.

Other authorities, such as one to regulate public utilities for metropolitan Washington, might also be useful here, he suggested.

Van Arkel, who is also a practicing attorney here, was addressing a luncheon of Chapter 1, American Veterans Committee, at the AVC headquarters, 1751 New Hampshire ave. nw.

The committee counsel, who made it clear he is squarely behind home rule for the District, had declared in his talk that home rule will not solve all local problems.

Because Washington has spread out into Maryland and Virginia, issues of planning, development and regulation involve the whole area, he said.

For example, he said, there is a problem in the conflict over utility regulation. In the case of transit, there are the interstate Commerce Commission, the District Public Utilities Commission and the two State bodies. Similarly, electric and gas utilities involve the Federal Power Commission and the District and State commissions, he pointed out.

It is also difficult now to plan, construct, and maintain such facilities for the whole area as bridges, highways, access roads and development of the Potomac River basin as a recreational area, because of jurisdictional conflicts, van Arkel said.

World War III Democracy's End, Eccles Warns

Democracy would not survive a third World War with atomic weapons, Marriner S. Eccles, member of the Federal Reserve Board, said yesterday.

"The expense would leave little if anything of democratic capitalism," Eccles told 800 economics and business administration students at the University of Maryland.

Eccles said also that "world communism is on the rise, while democracy is declining."

For this he blamed our foreign policy of the last 35 years which "in my opinion could not have made more mistakes than it has."

Prince Georges Bill Backed by Young Democrats

Approval of the Sothoron bill to streamline the county government was voiced by the Young Democrats of Prince Georges County at a meeting Tuesday night at Silver Hill Club.

A delegation will attend the public hearing at 8:30 p. m. Friday at Annapolis.

The club declared its approval of the bill as written and as a "step in the right direction." Acting president, Hervey G. Machen, and Robert Mathias explained that the bill is not a "home rule" bill, since it conveys no legislative rights.

Part-Time Schooling for Negroes Ends

New school construction has ended part-time education for the city's Negro school children, Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning reported yesterday.

He said that 1677 white elementary school children are on the half day schedules.

Four years ago 7150 Negro children and 254 white children were on the split shift program, the school head told the Board of Education.

Dr. Corning submitted his report at a meeting of the board at which the controversial proposal to transfer the white Central High School to use by Negro students was postponed.

Negro Members Challenge

Two Negro board members who had charged that Negro students were not receiving "equal educational opportunity" immediately questioned Corning's report.

Dr. Phillip Johnson said he frequently saw Negro children on the street when they should be in school. He said he understood they were on part-time.

Mrs. Velma G. Williams called on Corning to submit a report on class load. She said it was reported to her that Negro teachers had more children in their classes than white teachers.

Dr. Corning said 400 Negro students are waiting for admission into kindergartens but there is no waiting list in white schools.

He reported that part-time instruction in the white schools will end with completion of the new Simon Elementary School serving the Congress Heights area. Previous reports were that the school would be ready in September but the school head yesterday listed February 1951 as completion date.

Part-Time Schooling Listed

Schools still on part-time and the number of students are:

Kenilworth, 38; Congress Heights, 581; Patterson, 778, and Stanton, 280.

The board received a recommendation of the superintendent amending the Teachers Salary Act.

Proposed changes would give vocational teachers credit for trade experience in salary placement, recognize the degree of bachelor of library science as the equivalent of a masters degree when based on five years of experience, raise the salaries of the principals of the Americanization and Capital Page Schools, change the title of the position of the heads of departments to departmental supervisors, set up salary classifications for educational consultants and supervisors, and establish positions of assistant elementary principals.

Dr. Corning also asked that a position of chief examiner for Divisions 10 to 13 be established.

The board named the new Negro junior high school to be built at Pomeroy rd. and Douglass pl. se. the Frederick Douglass School and changed the name of the Douglass-Simmons School to Simmons School.

Robert A. Hiltz, third grade teacher at the Bancroft School, was appointed to the board of examiners, and Miss Mary M. Aldhizer, assistant principal at Central High School, was transferred to Paul Junior High School.

Younkins Is Reelected By Gaithersburg Unit

L. Reynolds Younkins has been elected captain of the Gaithersburg Rescue Squad for his eighth term, it was announced yesterday.

Other officers for 1950 are Norman McGaha, first lieutenant; Louis F. Watkins, jr., second lieutenant; James W. Magruder, sergeant; William M. Christie, secretary, and Dr. Frank J. Broschart, reelected surgeon.

Board Defers Decision on Central Shift

the aisles and filled the corridor outside the room.

Fifteen speakers appeared at the board to argue the Central transfer. Eight favored the proposal and seven spoke against it.

In asking for the delay, Mrs. Edward C. Magdeburger said "to be fair" the committee should consider a report of the Recreation Department on night recreational use of the Central facility. The report shows that more than 40,000 persons participated in recreational activities there in the period from last July to January.

Steinem said if Eliot were transferred the new Springarn school could be set up in Eliot and later transferred to the new Spingarn building.

Must Consider Loss

He said the board could then continue with its long range building program which calls for construction of two other new high schools for Negroes.

The board, he said, must give consideration to the loss of Central not only as a day school accommodating 1300 students but as a night school with an attendance of 1250.

"The board must do what it considers to be best for the entire school system," Steinem declared.

He asked Dr. Corning to prepare a report on his proposal.

Sincerity Doubted

Dr. Johnson said he was "somewhat leary of Steinem's sincerity."

The Negro board member said he felt that Steinem, who is not a member of the buildings and grounds committee, "could have spent his time on something before him own committee."

Arguing for the transfer of Cardozo students to the Central building, Johnson declared:

"Cardozo is not fit and cannot be made fit to house any number of children."

Johnson and Mrs. Velma G. Williams, another Negro board member, said neither recreation or night school programs should be given consideration over adequate housing of Cardozo students.

Mother Argues for Transfer

They argued that only a portion of the 1700 students now attending Cardozo could be moved into Eliot.

Mrs. Edith Portal, a speaker at the hearing, said she was the mother of one of the students who unsuccessfully sued the school board for "equal educational opportunity," in the case dismissed by the Court of Appeals Tuesday.

Others who spoke at the hearing in favor of the Central transfer were:

Rev. Stephen Gill Spottswood, president, District Branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Mrs. Alice C. Hunter, United Citizens for the Educational Adequacy of All Children of the District; Mrs. Vay Fortune, Mothers Club of Park View School; Don B. Goodloe, president of the Washington Senior High School Teachers Association; Woolsey Hall, president of the Federation of Civic Associations; Lieut Col. Robert L. Pollard, president Mott Parent-Teacher Association; Wesley S. Williams, Park View P-TA.

Against the transfer were:

Herbert P. Leeman, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Walter Bastian, Central Alumni Association; John A. Savage, Central Improvement Association; Mrs. Charles R. Rupp, parent of out of town student paying tuition; Harry Wender, Southwest Citizens Association; Elwood Baker, president of Mount Pleasant Citizens Association; James Reilly, president of the Graduate C Club.

Blake Gaming Reports False, Blick Says

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Police Lieut. Roy E. Blick testified yesterday that he has received many apparently groundless reports that Mrs. Dorothy S. Blake was using her Dorchester House apartment as a gambling den.

The testimony was given in the District Court divorce trial of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Keleher. Attorney Alvin L. Newmyer for Keleher, announced that the testimony would indicate that Mrs. Anna T. (Dolly) Keleher, 51, has pursued a policy of "harassment" against her estranged husband. John B. (Dapper Jack) Keleher, 68, and the alleged "other woman," Mrs. Blake, a 46-year-old divorcee.

Blick, chief of the police squad probing vice and gambling, was called as the second witness for Keleher who has begun his defense to a charge of cruelty.

Blick said the calls were made apparently by "several women," but many by a "crying woman," and all have been within the last 18 months.

Blick said investigation of the Blake apartment at the 2480 16th st. nw. building, showed no evidence of illegal activity.

He testified that the complainants refused to give their names but said that it was the "largest roulette wheel," with 40 or 50 men playing and with a television set turned on to show racing results.

According to Mrs. Keleher, her husband is a big-time gambling figure. Keleher, according to other testimony, made between $10,000 and $50,000 yearly over the past quarter century but retired from bookmaking in January, 1948.

Blick was originally called as a witness for Mrs. Keleher. He began by asking the court to allow him a $25 expert witness fee, to be paid in advance by Mrs. Keleher.

However, he testified without it. He said he knew Keleher by name only and gave the racing dates at various race tracks.

Later, on examination as to the Blake apartment incident, Blick acknowledged that he did not turn over the complaints to the United States attorney's office.

"Didn't you know that there was a gambling crusade going on?" queried James J. Laughlin, Mrs. Keleher's attorney.

"Yes," replied Blick.

"Did you know there was a file in the United States Attorney's office about Mrs. Blake?" asked Laughlin.

"I know nothing at all about the United States Attorney's confidential files," shouted Blick.

Dupont Underpass Completion Due April 7 if Weather Allows

District officials were promised yesterday that Dupont Circle underpass will be completed by April 7, weather permitting.

The completion date was announced by Director of Highways J. N. Robertson after a conference with officials of John McShain, Inc., firm which is building the underpass.

In response to criticism from businessmen in the area that the job is not being completed as rapidly as possible, Robertson said a crane will be added to speed excavation of the underpass approaches north of the circle.

Work still to be done, said Robertson, includes excavation of the approaches between Q st. and the circle, excavation south of the circle and paving of the underpass roadway. There also remains some sidewalk and paving work to be done on the surface, he said.

The project was started March 8, 1948. It was then due to be completed March 8 this year. However, Robertson said, the project was held up by the carpenters' strike last summer, and by the strikes of sand and gravel workers and truck drivers. In addition to that, eleven days have been lost since January 30 because of rain, he said.

Meanwhile, the Federation of Businessmen's Associations, unaware that the completion date had been promised for April 7, voted last night to look into the delay in the underpass construction.

A four-man committee was named to confer with Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, Engineer Commissioner, after hearing Horace J. Meyers, president of the Connecticut Avenue Businessmen's Association, say "further delay may mean financial ruin for many more merchants."

Meyers, who was named chairman of the committee, charged the contractor, John McShain, with laxity.

When Meyers was informed that District officials had been promised completion of the underpass by April 7, he said:

"It sounds wonderful. But we've had so many promises that haven't been kept."

Meyers said that although yesterday was pleasant and sunny he did not see a single man working south of Dupont Circle.

He said his committee will seek a meeting with General Young and try to obtain confirmation from him of the April 7 completion date.

"It's not that we doubt the sincerity of Robertson," said Meyers, "but apparently great pressure must be brought on the contractor if we are to get this job done."

Businessmen to Hold Hearing on Fare Raise

The Federation of Businessmen's Association last night voted to look into the Capital Transit proposed fare increases.

A nine-man Public Utilities Committee, headed by J. A. Kamerow, will hold a hearing on the subject, February 20 in the board room of the American Security & Trust Co. at 7:30 p. m. Kamerow invited both Federation members and others interested.

Tentative plans were also introduced at the monthly meeting, for a Government Employes Recognition Day to be held in the early summer. Committee Chairman Harry Koenigsberg said the event would stimulate business by remembering a large group of purchasers. Elaborate contests, dances and banquets are included in the plans.

The group also indorsed Walter M. Bird, president of the North Washington Council of Citizens Association, for the Junior Chamber of Commerce's Distinguished Service Award. The meeting was in the American Security & Trust Co. board room.

Dahlgren Terrace

A motion supporting a House bill which would transfer control of the District's parks, playgrounds and swimming pools, to the Commissioners' control was indorsed by the Dahlgren Terrace Citizens Association last night.

The group, meeting at the Crosby Noyes School, 10th and Franklin sts. ne., also urged that the school's playground be resurfaced in material other than cinders.

It also urged that the Brookland School, 10th and Monroe sts. ne., be demolished. Mrs. Helen Fritz, president, was named as delegate to the Northeastern Council.

Lincoln Civic

The Lincoln Civic Association last night voted in favor of increasing the Metropolitan Police Force. The meeting was held at the Francis Junior High School, 24th and N sts. nw.

The association also authorized President Dr. E. F. Harris to urge neighborhood property owners to improve the condition of houses now in disrepair, went on record as opposing an increase in streetcar fares, and backing a more adequate vagrancy law.

Two Thugs Beat, Rob Tavern Owner of $400 in Cheverly, Md.

Two thugs put a hammerlock on Tommy Long's 400 bucks early yesterday. They got away.

"They were real lucky—lucky to get away, I mean," said one officer of the law.

Tommy Long operates the Friendly Inn on Tuxedo rd., near the Tuxedo-Cheverly firehouse in Prince Georges County.

Once upon a time he operated the Dixie Pig in Bladensburg, and never was he guilty of serving tea and crumpets, either.

And Tommy Long is a former professional wrestler built along the lines of a Percheron.

But at 58—well, perhaps the reflexes aren't what they once were.

It was 2:45 a. m. Tommy Long was on the point of entering his house at 2701 Cheverly ave., Cheverly, Md. He was carrying a tin box containing about $400.

The two thugs jumped from behind bushes. One slugged Tommy Long with a makeshift blackjack—a section of lead pipe wrapped in tape.

The hoodlums soon discovered they had picked on a formidable foe. Tommy Long was holding up his end all right, but not getting any holds, as they say in the wrestle world.

The tin box handicapped him. He dropped it. One of the attackers scooped it up and he and his companion fled.

Tommy Long gave chase, but the pair jumped in a parked car a half a block away and drove off in a 1948 or 1949 green, four-door Hudson sedan bearing District tags.

Tommy Long had several bruises on his head, but he waved away offers of medical attention when police arrived.

All he wants is a rematch. He's even willing to let the two thugs come in again with the lead pipe.

Mrs. Perry Asks Voiding of Her Divorce Decree

Mrs. Olive J. Perry, of 2433 Ontario rd. nw., asked District Court yesterday to declare void a divorce decree she obtained in the Virgin Islands last year from Leslie S. Perry, legislative representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mrs. Perry, who filed suit for $50,000 alienation of affections damages from Ruth Weyand, a National Labor Relations Board attorney, contends she was ill at the time of the Virgin Islands decree and that it was brought about because of the coercion of her husband.

Man Robbed of $8

Leonard M. Coster, 68, of 516 A st. ne., was robbed of $8 by two yokers who grabbed him from behind last night at 9:30 p. m. on 6th st. near E. Capitol st. The men fled up an alley.

District Bar Group Votes To Seek Own Headquarters

Patterson Mansion Mentioned as One Possible Place for Permanent Home

The District Bar Association last night voted unanimously to establish a committee to find permanent headquarters for the organization.

The association now has offices in the Washington Building. It's library is in the District Court Building.

Patterson House Plan

John L. Laskey, bar association president, told the 385 members at the meeting—which was observed as "United States Court of Appeals Night"—that it had been suggested the association undertake to give the Red Cross contributions and "firm pledges" at least equalling the value of the Patterson mansion payable "over a period not exceeding two years."

Laskey said he had been advised that the Patterson town house was unsuited to the needs of the Red Cross.

As a corollary proposal, it was suggested that Congress be "induced" to provide a law library for the use of the judges in the new courthouse now under construction, and the bar association's library then be transferred to the headquarters the organization selects.

The motion for a permanent home committee, introduced in behalf of the association's board of directors, did not direct the committee to confine its investigation to the possibly of the Patterson house alone, but directed it to investigate any possibility of acquiring a permanent home, either by purchase or rental.

Hyman A. Fischbach, member of the New York Bar and special counsel for the House Committee to Investigate Crime and Law Enforcement in the District, spoke briefly.

Fischbach Speaks

Fischbach said the committee "does not want to smear anybody, but we are going to get the bare facts and roll them right down the middle of the alley."

Chief Judge Harold M. Stephens of the United States Court of Appeals for the District, was the chief speaker on the program that followed the business meeting.

Judge Stephens, who, with other members of the Court of Appeals bench, had been guests of honor at a dinner preceding the meeting, reveiwed the recent history of the courts in Washington.

He said for the fiscal year 1947 there had been 264 actual appeal cases in the Court of Appeals here, and 466 cases in the fiscal year 1948. For the first seven months of the present fiscal year, he said, 219 cases have been filed—two more than were filed during a parallel period in the last fiscal year.

Crime Inquiry Counsel Predicts 'Big News Today'

Counsel Hyman I. Fishbach of the House committee investigating crime here promised last night a "big news" break when hearings are resumed at 1:30 p. m. today.

He declined to elaborate on his forecast beyond saying "we will first take up some loose ends" left hanging at Monday's session, then "go into another phase which I know will command your interest."

Chairman James C. Davis (D., Ga.) told reporters last night he was not certain what the program would be today.

A slight shift of plans had become necessary, he thought, because a large police detail had been ordered to cover the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner at the National Guard Armory tonight.

Woodlawn Zoning Rehearing Rejected

A rehearing on the controversial Woodlawn rezoning was refused yesterday by the Prince Georges County Commissioners.

The commissioners, meeting in Hyattsville, voted 3 to 2 to deny the rehearing sought by the Woodlawn Citizens Association.

Commissioner T. Hammond Welsh, sr., in moving to deny the rehearing, said he was "tired of hearing petitions over and over." He said he had been criticized for favoring the rezoning, but it was his "honest belief that the rezoning is for the benefit of the community and I am not going to change my mind."

His son, T. Hammond Welsh, jr., represented the petitioner for the rezoning, Edwin B. Feldman, who plans construction of semi-detached homes in the 22-acre tract adjacent to Woodlawn. On February 7 he was granted rezoning from one-family residential to two-family residential classification.

The commissioners also affirmed another action rezoning of a 5-acre tract in the 6300 block of Edmonston rd., East Riverdale, to permit erection of a theater and recreation center for which a rehearing was held yesterday.

Commissioner Welsh's son produced petitions signed by 472 favoring the rezoning.

The commissioners approved semi-detached home classification for 20 acres of the 55-acre tract on University la., west of the northwest branch of the Anacostia River, near Lewisdale, asked by David Finkelstein and Herman D. Paul. A group of citizens opposed the rezoning.

A petition of Ralph H. Wagner for commercial zoning of two lots at 34th and Webster sts., Brentwood, was denied.

Commercial zoning was granted to William C. Ferguson for three fourths of an acre at University la. and Ridge rd.; to B. O. Lowndes Wells for a lot on Gallatin st., near Baltimore blvd., Hyattsville, and to Benny Bass for two lots at 37th st. and Rhode Island ave., Mount Rainier.

Rezoning from commercial to apartment house use was granted to Archie and Henrietta Rosenblatt for a portion of one lot on Edmonston rd., opposite Patterson rd., East Riverdale.

Through April 2

Blossom Fete To Begin March 31

Blossoms or no blossoms, the 1950 Washington Cherry Blossom Festival will be held March 31, April 1 and April 2.

The festival committee yesterday announced dates, plans and the appointment of C. J. Mack, manager of the Mayflower Hotel, as general chairman of the event for the third successive year.

Following a committee meeting, Mack said if the famed cherry blossoms at the Tidal Basin and in Potomac Park don't come out on the man-made schedule, the festival will go on without them.

However, they should arrive in time "if all our figures are correct," Edward J. Kelly of National Capital Parks said.

The warm weather Washington has enjoyed thus far this winter will not make the cherry trees blossom earlier than usual, according to Horace D. Wester, plant pathologist of the National Park Service.

The program announced by the committee calls for a reception for the princesses to be sent by each State and three territories, in the Senate caucus room on March 30. The queen will be chosen at a formal reception the next day at the Shoreham Hotel.

On April 1 and 2, a pageant, "The Story of Spring," will be staged in the Sylvan Theater, on the Washington Monument grounds.

At night on both these dates, there will be a water pageant in the Tidal Basin near the Jefferson Memorial.

Bastogne Hero Presents Sabers to Cadets . . .

The Washington Post

GIFTS FROM LIONS—Maj. Gen. Anthony McAuliffe, who said "Nuts!" to the Germans who asked him to surrender at Bastogne, hands a saber to Cadet Col. Thomas A. Farley of Roosevelt High School. Observing the presentation is Randolph E. Myers, president of the Lions Club of Washington, whose members give the sabers annually to high school cadet commanders. Others who received them are (in ranks, from left) Lieut. Col. Walter Shropshire of Anacostia, Maj. Gary A. Phillips of Western, Capt. Paul P. Altman of McKinley, Capt. Josia P. Ned Hall of Chamberlain, and Maj. Milton R. Neitzey of Bell

Interstate Bus Hearing Set February 27

The Interstate Commerce Commission will hear oral arguments February 27 in an action challenging the State of Virginia's right to operate the struck A. B. & W. bus line into the District.

The unusual case arose out of a complaint filed last September by the bus company employes' union, questioning the State's authority under ICC regulations to run an interstate line.

The State has operated the carrier since last July 21, the strike date set by the union in a wage dispute. Former Gov. William M. Tuck took over the line under the Virginia public utilities strike seizure law.

The legal arguments to be heard will be on a motion filed by the Governor and the State Corporation Commission to dismiss the union complaint, which also names the company as a defendant. The Corporation Commission operates the carrier for the State.

An ICC spokesman said the motion could have been ruled on without legal arguments, but that the "novel" nature of the case made further discussion desirable.

The employes' union is Local 1131, Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes (AFL).

Gen. McAuliffe Gives Sabers To Outstanding D. C. Cadets

Commanders of the top high school cadet corps here were presented yesterday with Army officers' sabers by Maj. Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe, who used to be an Eastern High School cadet himself.

The hero of Bastogne, now chief of the Army Chemical Corps, made the presentation for the Washington Lions Club at a luncheon meeting in the Mayflower Hotel. General McAuliffe recalled that the 25 Washington cadets who were in his class at West Point were "right at the top" in military bearing, proficiency and scholarship.

The general praised the Lions Club for its annual recognition of outstanding cadets in the local high schools, which he termed a contribution to the worthy cause of building good citizenship.

Lieut. Col. William E. Barkman, District instructor of cadets, said most of the subjects now taught in the cadet program, involve classroom work without recognition from "cheering throngs."

For that reason, he said, it is "a little difficult" to persuade the students to join a cadet corps.

Receiving the sabers for both their scholarship and cadet work were the following:

Col. Thomas A. Farley of Roosevelt High School, Lieut. Col. Walter A. Shropshire, jr., of Anacostia, Majs. Samuel O. Albert of Roosevelt, Edmund H. Feldman of Wilson, Milton R. Neitzey of Bell, and Gary A. Phillips of Western; Capts. Josiah P. Alford of Coolidge, Paul P. Altman of McKinley, Charles A. Davis, jr., of Central, Ned Hall of Chamberlain and Melvin Simon of Eastern.

D. C. Requirements For Engineers Hit

The District has become the gathering spot for engineers who cannot qualify to practice in other jurisdictions, a spokesman for the National Society of Professional Engineers told a congressional committee yesterday.

Col. Walter L. Simpson, retired Army engineer, made the assertion before a House District subcommittee in support of a measure to tighten requirements for practicing engineers here.

Washington, he said, is the only jurisdiction which does not have a licensing law controlling professional engineers.

"As a result, many fellows who can't qualify elsewhere are trickling into the District," he said.

Because of the lack of a licensing law, he said several severe accidents have occurred. He cited the Empire Hotel collapse on December 16, 1947 as a case in point.

The bill under consideration would establish a five-man board of registration for professional engineers and would require written examinations or "satisfactory" equivalent experience as prerequites for acquiring a license in the District.

Alex B. Rankine, representing the Universal Craftsmen Council and Engineers, testified against the bill on the grounds it might put "operating" engineers, such as steam fitters, out of business, and would "bar almost everyone in the profession who doesn't have a formal engineering education."

The subcommittee, headed by Representative Oren Harris (D., Ark.), heard testimony on a bill to amend the Architect's registration Act. This measure also would require written examination for licenses, and would make registration mandatory for all practicing architects here.

Prefers Navy

Youth Wins Annapolis, 'Point' Tests

"Guess I'm just lucky," John Joseph Heil, 19, of 1719 Otis st. nw., said yesterday.

Heil placed first in competitive examinations for the District Commissioners' nominations to both the Military Academy and Naval Academy, it was announced yesterday, and has chosen the nomination to Annapolis.

Those winning the nominations to West Point include: Barron Fredricks 3d, 17, 3200 McKinley st nw.; Jock Muir, 18, of 3401 16th st. nw., and Donald William Frazee, 18, of 3802 S. Capitol st.

Fredericks Muir

Frazee Heil

Heil was graduated from McKinley High School in June, 1949, and is now attending Columbian Preparatory School.

He is the son of the late Lieut. Col. Joseph Heil, U.S.M.C., a 1928 Annapolis graduate who served with the Fourth Marines at Corregidor and died in 1944 while aboard a Japanese prison ship bombed by American planes. The youth's mother is Mrs. Winifred Parkman Heil.

Young Heil's paternal grandfather, the late Lieut. Joseph Frederick Heil, served 38 years in the Navy, and the maternal grandfather, the Rev. Henry C. Parkman, retired, is a Naval Reserve chaplain.

Heil said he chose Annapolis because "I guess it is tradition and I think it is an interesting life." He would like to be a Marine.

Fredricks, son of Barron Fredricks and Mrs. Cathleen Beattie Fredricks, will graduate this spring from St. John's College, 1225 Vermont ave. nw.

Muir, son of James W. Muir and Christine Hampson Muir, graduated from Woodrow Wilson High last month.

Frazee is the son of Maurice D. Frazee and Mrs. Louise Chambers Frazee. He is a graduate of Anacostia High and is now attending Sullivan School.

Rise Forseen In Arlington School Costs

The first public estimate on Arlington's school budget for the 1950-51 fiscal year was revealed last night.

School Board member Barnard Joy said it would cost at least $3,500,000 to operate the schools at the same level they are now, with the addition of 2000 new pupils. The 1949-50 school budget was $2,950,000.

Speaking before the Arlington County Council of Parent-Teacher Associations at Thomas Jefferson School in Arlington, Dr. Joy said receipts from State and local sources were estimated at between $3,400,000 and $3,500,000.

Responsible for the budget increase, beside new enrollment, were: operational expenses for 118 additional classrooms, salaries for 70 new teachers, debt service, wage raises, and improvements, he said.

He said an additional $200,000 was expected, half from the State, the rest from rising assessments, to cover the remainder of the budget.

The 65 delegates discussed but took no action on the question of age at which children are to be admitted into county schools. An unofficial vote found 36 favoring admitting 6 year olds in September; 28 were for admitting children who were six by December 15; and two backed other plans.

700 Assail Plan to Abolish Milk Commission in Virginia

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Feb. 15 — An overwhelming majority of 700 persons appearing before a House Committee today foretold certain retention of the Virginia Milk Commission and its power to fix prices.

Members of the House Agriculture Committee indicated after a tumultous public hearing that they will kill two measures sponsored by peninsula delegates at their next meeting Wednesday.

Dairy farmers and milk distributors by the hundred jammed the hall of the House to assault the proposals to abolish the commission or to strip it of power to fix prices everywhere in Virginia except Richmond and Charlottesville.

In the Senate, meanwhile, a proposal to repeal another type of price-fixing — rent control — was passed by for the day. Senator Charles R. Fenwick, of Arlington, was prepared to offer an amendment Thursday to exempt his county from decontrol.

Senator Andrew W. Clarke of Alexandria stood fast on his plan to favor State-wide repeal and said he "will fight any amendments."

Delegate Armistead L. Boothe, supporter of a successful House amendment to keep controls in the area near Washington, said Alexandria City Council wired him it had voted 4-1 in favor of decontrol by "local option."

The spirited hearing on milk prices was highlighted by producers who contended that the commission had brought "smooth and orderly business" out of a condition of "chaos and trouble."

Chief spokesman for proponents of repeal measures was F. Lee Ford, representing the Peninsula Shipbuilders Association of Newport News. He said the commission "operates a monopoly under the law but under the guise of an emergency."

Boothe also introduced a second bill to establish a State commission on race relations. It is identical to one offered last week, except for omission of a proposed appropriation of $1000 a year. Both measures and a Boothe bill to eliminate racial segregation on public transportation will be considered at a public hearing before the House committee on courts of justice at 3 p. m. Monday.

Delegate Edwin Lynch of Fairfax offered a bill that would require water companies serving Fairfax to provide fire protection where pipe lines are available. He said Franconia, Bailey's Crossroads and Groveton probably would be affected at first Woman Wonders Why Her Customary Happy Poise Is Always Shattered by the Approach of One Inferior Female Whom She's Known for Years

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Why is it that I am comfortable and at ease with all persons I know, save one? This exception is a woman—I'll call her Vida—whom I have known for a dozen years, and I have yet to feel relaxed in her presence.

She is inferior to me intellectually, yet she has the power to make me stammer and blunder, and look, feel and act gauche. I am helpless when it comes to competing with her. I am always made to feel stupid while she basks in triumph, even though she has been guilty of the most flagrant mistakes—no matter what the argument or the occasion.

I possess more than the average, so I have no reason to feel jealous of her from a material viewpoint. I have two college degrees, speak five languages and have traveled extensively. I am ordinarily happy and interested in life, and I seem well-integrated. But let this woman appear and I am reduced to a nevrous wretch.

I have tried for years to analyze the difficulty, but I have failed. I have no trouble with any other person, man or woman; and if I understood the problem, I could do something about it. But I don't understand it—and I hope you can clear it up. Thank you very much for any help. D. L.

One Is Jealous, the Other Fearful

DEAR D. L.: It is my first impression that Vida is intensely jealous of you, and that in your company she is strenuously competitive, in an aggressively hostile spirit that seeks to tear you down (in your own and the onlookers' estimate), although perhaps her operations are superficially camouflaged by a honeyed social manner.

If you are the butt of that type of emotional pitch from her, naturally you will feel (involuntarily) threatened by it, on the instinct-level (that is, you will if you are full of unfaced fears of people); and you will react spontaneously in terms of what you deeply feel about yourself, as to your real quality. And that kind of reaction cannot be governed by reason, of course, so long as one doesn't understand, clearly and consciously, what is going on either in one self or the hostile person.

Now, the second significant impression I get from your letter is that your good opinion of yourself is pretty shaky; that it is more of a claim to alleged superiority than a deep conviction of excellence; and therefore is as easily scattered as a house of cards, if some hostile person (like Vida) determinedly needles your supposedly "integrated" front. And on this count I believe you are jealous of Vida, jealous of her solid brass self assurance and whatever personal qualities she parades as weapons to back it (sex appeal, maybe?)—that give her (in your opinion) such frightening advantage over you in the social dueling described.

Maturity Leads Way to Harmony

AS TO WHY Vida envies you, perhaps it's because (as you say) you are extensively educated and traveled, have more worldly goods than she, a better mind, etc.; and in contemplating these differences she may privately feel uncouth and underprivileged in comparison, and also irked by your attempts to affect superiority to her (when you are trying to keep your chin up). Consequently, resentful reactions are likely to brew in her bosom, so that she derisively acts her worst to get your goat, by mocking your "genteel" values with a comic display of ignorance or alleged indifference to social culture.

A sensitive person struggling against that kind of entanglement with a hard-boiled vulgarian is apt to come off second best, unless endowed with true insight into hostility, plus the easy composure that derives from deep self understanding and self acceptance, plus a natural wit that can, when necessary, take the hide off the opposition in an impromptu revealing phrase. And it seems that although you are sensitive, you haven't yet acquired this list of civilized self protective attributes.

The real antidote for the disharmony that disturbs Vida and you is to cultivate a practice of thinking and acting maturely, insofar as we know how to be mature. And for guidance in this, read Dr. H. A. Overstreet's clear-spoken book "The Mature Mind" (W. W. Norton & Company). M. H.

Coal Strike Clouds the Crystal Ball

By Genevieve Reynolds And Nicha Soure

DR. JOHN D. CLARK, member of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, yesterday declared that the coal strike already has upset all predictions on the Nation's economic situation.

"It is impossible to forecast economic conditions until people go back to work," he told members of the Women's National Press Club in a luncheon speech at the Mayflower Hotel.

Since July 1, 1949, soft coal miners have been on a three-day, two-day or no-day working status. A full-fledged strike is still in progress in the coal fields despite a Federal Court's back-to-work order.

The economic adviser said that he did not expect additional inflationary prices in 1950. His comment was in response to a question on the subject. He explained that we will spend this year catching up on unused resources.

According to Dr. Clark, President Truman "has uniformly followed the recommendations of the Council of Economic Advisers since it was created by the Employment Act of 1946."

First Lady Lunches 'Incognito'—Almost!

By Marie McNair

GUESTS gasped and gaped as Mrs. Truman walked casually into the Mayflower cocktail lounge at the luncheon hour yesterday.

The President's wife rarely lunches privately in a public dining room—although she attends many official mid-day functions in hotels and restaurants.

Occasion for this exception to her habit was a luncheon by Mrs. Constance Snow for the sponsors' committee of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. The First Lady is chief sponsor for the Washington premiere of Missouri's most celebrated orchestra. The concert is scheduled for March 11 at Constitution Hall, and Mrs. Truman has taken a box for the event.

Mrs. John Steelman, acting chairman of the event, is so enthusiastic about the "home town" symphony that she had already sold 26 boxes even before the committee met.

Mrs. Barkley, the Vice President's bride, is also on the sponsor committee and was at the luncheon, too. Others there were Mrs. James K. Vardaman, Mrs. Harry Vaughan and Mrs. Preston Kavanaugh. Mrs. John W. Snyder and Mrs. Lloyd Symington were the only absentees.

Democrats Need Two Armories

FIVE thousand dinners, each plate at the price of $100, adds up to a lot of money.

But the Democratic National Committee wishes the Washington Armory was about twice the size, because the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner tonight has been oversubscribed.

U. S. Treasurer Georgia Neese Clark, who's as good looking as she is smart, will be the only speaker on the distaff side tonight. Introducing her will be Mrs. Max Gardner, co-chairman with Charles Luckman of the dinner committee.

The 50 "Belles of Democracy"—daughters of leading Democrats—will easily be identifiable by pink and white camellias held to their wrists by bracelets of tinkling bells.

Paul Hoffman Host to Visitors

PAUL G. HOFFMAN, ECA Administrator, gave a luncheon yesterday at the Carolton Hotel for members of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation who are visiting here from Paris.

In the company were Baron Jean Charles Snoy, chairman of OEEC; Sir Edmund Hall-Patch, UK chairman of the executive committee; Andre Filippi, chairman trade committee; Eric Roll, chairman programme committee, and Hubert Ansiaux, chairman payments committee.

Members of the OEEC secretariat attending the luncheon were Robert Marjolin, secretary general; Michel Denis, geographical counselor; Jack Parkinson, economic assistant and Peter Storrs, committee secretary.

House and Embassy Tour Moves Apace

Other committee members who attended were Mrs. Andrew Keck, chairman of the flower arrangement committee; Mrs. Gordon R. Young, treasurer; Mrs. Lloyd B. van da Linda, vice chairman of the benefit committee; Mrs. James O. Denby, Mrs. Robert Taft, Mrs. James Helm, Mrs. Angus Dun, Mrs. Robert S. What to Do With an Elk's Tooth? Anne Knows! And She Guarantees Her Recipe for Sour Cream Pie

DEAR ANNE:
I have an elk's tooth that I wish to have put into an elk charm or watch fob symbolic of the Elk Order. I haven't been able to locate a place that makes lodge pins, fobs, etc. Can you tell me one of them. Sincerely, J. R.

DEAR J. R.:
Lodges in the Washington area appear to divide up their business among several firms. According to an executive of the Elks Club here, that organization's favorite jeweler can be reached at NA. 0419. This firm sells all the regulation Elks insignia. However, it does not specialize in making jewelry to order. If your own elk's tooth can't be mounted there the way you want it, you might try another firm at RE. 0219. This latter firm is a manufacturing jeweler, which can copy any sample you present or create for you an original design.

TO OLD SOUTHERN DIXIECRAT, who sent in recipe for persimmon beer: We have a communique for you from another reader. If you will send in your name and address, it will be forwarded.

DEAR ANNE:
Can any "Ask Anne" readers give me information about planning and executing a colorful church tea? S. M.

Any original ideas on this subject, readers?

DEAR ANNE:
The Salvation Army Book and Magazine Store, in the alley back of their main building on 1st and F sts. nw., has a very large selection of all magazines. The December issue of 'Holiday' can most certainly be obtained there.

For the person who wants to decorate the plain white end table, I would suggest decorating with 'decoupage'. Beautiful material can be obtained for this from seed catalogues or back issues of the better magazines. MRS. R. C. BLISS.

DEAR ANNE:
I am looking for a recipe for sour cream pie that is not made with raisins. This is an old-time recipe. The pie has the consistency of a cottage cheese pie when baked.

Mrs. Harold Collison
Wheaton Hills
Silver Spring, Md.

SOUR CREAM PIE

1 cup sugar
1 cup thick sour cream
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 unbaked pie shell

Beat eggs, add sugar, and beat until light. Beat sour cream slightly and fold into egg mixture. Add nutmeg, salt, and lemon juice and mix thoroughly. Pour mixture into pie shell. (Cover with top crust if desired.) Bake in hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for 10 minutes. Reduce temperature to moderate (350 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake another 20 minutes. This recipe makes 1 (9-inch) pie.

Hints for Sewing Success:

'Three to Make Ready' For Washington Post's Prize-Winning Contest

By Peggy Preston

NOW'S THE TIME to collect the tools you'll need for participation in The Washington Post Sewing Contest.

Opening gun will be sounded on March 1. But between now and that date wise entrants will be giving serious attention to the type of garment they wish to submit. They'll be visiting pattern and fabric departments, assembling thread, buttons, zippers, ornaments and other items of trimming. When the opening day rolls around they will be all set to go, getting a head start in the race that can end in a three-day trip to New York and a national prize of $100.

It should be understood that all garments entered in the contest must be completed within the period from March 1 to April 15. An exception is made for students who may have worked on them during the current school term.

Must Offer Official Entry Blank

EACH GARMENT entered must be accompanied by an official entry blank, clipped from The Washington Post. So, let that be your first step. Take it right now. Clip the blank printed on this page, study it carefully. File it where you can refer to it easily for reminders of rules, etc. When your entry is submitted, an entry blank, fully filled out, must be basted to the garment.

Once you've made up your mind which classification of the contest you wish to enter, you can begin playing with pattern and fabric ideas.

In this preliminary stage you are apt to be faced with an old bug-a-boo of amateur seamstresses. Which comes first—the pattern or the fabric?

The ideal, of course, is to determine the type of garment most suitable to your wardrobe, the style most becoming to your type of figure, then buy the pattern accordingly. Modern patterns, with printed fabric requirements on the envelope, can be your handy buying guide, save you moments of indecision, as well as money.

Best to Get Your Pattern First

IT IS EASY TO get sidetracked, however, and yield to a fabric first when you come face to face with the temptations of the yards goods department. For here, with counters stacked high with interesting new textures, it is difficult to resist buying several lengths, without benefit of pattern, for that dress or suit you would "like to have." All too often, the eye-catching fabrics which stimulate you are not suitable to the type of garment you will choose to make when you've considered style points.

So, best bet is to visit the pattern department first. Or, if you plan to enter one of the original design classifications of the contest, make your own pattern before venturing into the fabric field.

Because the fabric story made the top fashion news of the year, we plan to tell you about it in a later column dealing with other aspects of the contest.

Selecting Prize Winners

A PANEL of judges will convene after the close of the local contest on April 15 to select first and second prize winning entries in each of the eight classifications (first prizes of $50 each will be awarded; second prizes of $20 each). Garments will be judged on the following points:

1. Workmanship
2. Neatness
3. Style
4. Attractiveness
5. Suitability of style and fabric to type of garment.

Your Figure

Calisthenics Will Develop Those Curves

By Ida Jean Kain

WITH THE ACCENT on curves revealing necklines, the girls with little padding on the collarbone and about the chest write that they feel left out in the cold.

Take a deep breath, girls, and go after curves. And take that deep breathing advice literally. Too many women are shallow breathers. Singers have beautifully developed chests, and it comes with proper breathing.

A little daily exercise can work wonders too. Bear in mind that exercise normalizes, and that all exercise is developing in the underdeveloped spots. Take these builder-uppers in front of a mirror so you can actually see the improvement.

FIRST of all, facing the mirror, smile . . . no use going at this grimly. Now hold arms straight out at sides at shoulder level, then bend elbows and have forearms up, palms facing front. Take that deep breath and as you slowly let it out, shake hands vigorously . . . shake, shake, shake.

Change the movement slightly by holding the arms straight out at sides and shoulder level and from that position make tiny backward circles . . . again breathing deeply and letting the breath out slowly as you circle.

Over Your Shoulder

ANOTHER deep breath and turn your head to look over one shoulder. Still holding your breath, tip chin up from the over-the-shoulder position. Lower head, exhale, and circle back to center. Breathe in again, hold the breath and turn head to look over the shoulder. Repeat 6 times.

47 World Unit Dues Cost U. S. 145 Millions

Uncle Sam has developed into a "joiner" in the last 10 years, a subcommittee of the Senate Expenditures Committee, headed by Senator Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.), reported to Congress yesterday.

Last year this country contributed 145 million dollars to 47 international organizations, O'Conor reported. Ten years ago, in 1939, it cost this Government only $835,590 to belong to 23 organizations.

In many of the international bodies this country has no decision as to how much its assessment shall be.

This country has got stuck for 70 percent of the costs of some of these international agencies, and in others as low as 2 percent. The average, O'Conor reported, was 47.2 percent.

One agency cost Uncle Sam only $50; another 70 million. The low-priced one was, hold your hat, The Central Bureau of the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale. The 70-million dollar agency was the International Refugee Organization. In the same category was the U. N. International Children's Emergency Fund, which got 25 million and the U. N. Relief for Palestine Refugees, which got eight million.

The O'Conor committee concluded:

1. That there should be a reduction of expenditures for international organizations.
2. That creation of new agencies should be opposed.
3. That steps be taken to liquidate, consolidate or integrate existing organizations where they overlap.
4. That organizations in which the United States participates should be conducted "prudently."
5. That American representatives "continue to press for a reduction" in our assessments.

Man Sentenced To Die Mar. 17 In Rail Slaying

Fred S. Pritchett, 38-year-old mechanic, yesterday was sentenced to die in the electric chair March 17 for the murder of Clyde L. King, switch engine engineer, last July 10.

The death sentence was pronounced by Federal Judge T. Alan Goldsborough in District Court after he had turned down a motion for a new trial argued by Defense Attorney James J. Laughlin.

In setting the date, Goldsborough shrugged off an objection by Laughlin to the setting of the execution for St. Patrick's Day—March 17.

The defense attorney served notice he would file for appeal from the conviction with the United States Court of Appeals.

Pritchett was convicted of first degree murder by a District Court jury January 27.

King was shot to death in the cab of his locomotive at the Eckington yards of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

State Gas Tax Losses Put at $3 Million

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Feb. 15.—The State of Maryland is losing approximately three million dollars in gasoline taxes each year on gasoline purchased in Washington but consumed on Maryland highways.

Robert M. Reindollar, chairman of the Maryland State Roads Commission, complained of this state of affairs to the General Assembly Senate finance committee here today.

"We think we've got a very good case for asking the Federal Government to contribute" to Maryland highway support, he added.

Reindollar pointed out that "70 percent of the population of the Nation goes through the State to go into the National Capital." This has resulted in tremendous wear on State roads, he said.

Senator Louis L. Goldstein (D., Calvert) said heavy truck traffic throughout the State is making "railroad tracks" of the State's roads.

Reindollar said studies were now under way to determine what type of road is best suited for the increasingly heavy usage and heavy tonnage that uses the highways.

Senator Paul J. Bailey (R., St. Marys) complained bitterly of the condition of the Marlboro bypass roadway. He said it has been open only two months, and is now "all broken up and oozy."

Reindollar warned committee members that some new means of State revenue must be found to finance the three types of highway programs—primary, secondary and urban. He said gasoline tax revenues are insufficient for that purpose.

In other actions affecting the Maryland area near Washington:

The Prince Georges delegation introduced a bill to permit Berwyn Heights to construct and improve its streets when 51 percent of the abutting property owners agree.

And an amended Montgomery County bill, giving the county limited, rather than broad powers, to condemn property for county construction projects, was reported out of the rules committee and sent to the judiciary committee.

Nearby bills scheduled to be introduced by the Prince Georges County delegation in the near future, Leader Perry O. Wilkinson said, include four to change the governmental structure of District Heights. The bills have the effect of dividing the town into five wards and providing for election of a commissioner for each ward. The measures also specify voters' powers and election rules.

PUC Rejects Rehearing on Transit Radio

The District Public Utilities Commission yesterday turned down six requests for a rehearing on the transit radio issue.

Last December the PUC approved the radio broadcasts in Capitol Transit Co. vehicles as being "consistant with public convenience, comfort and safety." In its order issued yesterday, the PUC stated it felt its "findings and opinion . . . are clearly supported by the testimony of record and should be affirmed."

Requests for a rehearing had been received from Franklin S. Pollak and Guy Martin, Paul N. Temple, jr., Transit Riders' Association; Hector G. Spaulding and others; Bernard Tassler, for himself and the National Citizens' Committe Against Forced Reading and Forced Listening, and the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown. A request by the American Civil Liberties Union last Monday to file a brief was denied because it was too late.

Claude N. Palmer, president of Transit Riders' Association, predicted the question will now be taken to court. The association has already sought an injunction in District Court to halt the broadcasts.

New Garage To Be Built In Fairfax

Despite strong protests from adjacent property owners, the Fairfax County board of supervisors yesterday decided to erect a maintenance garage on Germantown rd. near Route 50.

The garage is to be built on a 15-acre tract owned by the county which presently serves as a Potter's Field and also is the site of the county dog pound.

The property owners, through attorney Hardee Chambliss, jr., argued that having the dog pound and Potter's Field there is bad enough, particularly when the area is zoned rural residential.

Chambliss asserted that the board, in building the garage, would be violating the spirit of the zoning ordinance. "If the county," he declared, "puts a garage in there where it wouldn't permit a private citizen to do it, it is not in the spirit of the zoning ordinance."

In reply, G. Wallace Carper, chairman of the board, again extended an invitation to the property owners the board had made previously:

"You find one other place in Fairfax County," Carper invited, "where we can put a Potter's Field and a dog pound (and a maintenance garage), and we'll do it."

Permission to erect the garage was granted Fairfax County on January 10 by the board of zoning appeals. The property owners then appealed to the supervisors to reverse the zoning board's permit.

Lake Sought In Arlington As Play Site

The Arlington County board has asked its State legislators to seek legislation allowing the State to acquire a 680-acre tract in Fairfax County as a State park.

The board took action at the close of the monthly zoning meeting Tuesday night in Arlington Courthouse.

The wooded area in question includes the 114-acre Barcroft Lake and is located several miles beyond the Arlington County line off Columbia Pike between Baileys Crossroad and Annandale. It has been offered for sale by the Alexandria Water Co. for a recreation area.

'Berlin Command'

Soviet Statement on A-Power Termed False Lullaby

By Brig. Gen. Frank Howley

This is the last of 12 articles taken from the new book, "Berlin Command," appearing daily in The Washington Post. The author, Brig. Gen. Frank Howley, battled the Russians for four years, from 1945 to 1949, as deputy commander and then commander of American forces in Berlin.

WHEN I left Berlin in September, 1949, things were normal again.

The Russians were behaving exactly as Russians always behave.

The Soviet radio was popping its tubes with glee over my resignation as commandant. For some reason, I was suddenly "Howley, the Rough Rider from Texas."

The Russian radio, to the accompaniment of cowboy music, was deriding me for refusing to be drawn into the web again in the Kommandatura.

I rather think that General Kotikov will remember our farewell. The Kommandatura had just concluded its meeting and, as the departing chairman, I was host at the inevitable buffet in the next room.

Kotikov had used up a good portion of the meeting complaining about various things, including my "rudeness," but now he was unusually affable. A waiter brought a tray of drinks as we stood talking. Kotikov communed with his ulcers and announced that he wanted a "weak" drink.

"Champagne?" someone asked.

Kotikov puffed out his cheeks and shook his head. "Makes me belch," he said.

"Have a Martini," I said.

"What is a Martini?" Kotikov asked.

"I pointed to the lethal drink on the tray. Innocently, Kotikov picked it up. I took champagne. Kotikov raised his glass.

"To a successful journey to the United States," he proposed, fairly bursting with glee at the prospect of my leaving. We all drank.

To my astonishment, Kotikov gulped the entire contents of his glass—Martini, olive and all. A look of wonder crossed his face.

I proposed a toast. Another Martini clanked down to the Russian's ulcers. There were two more toasts and two more rapid Martinis for Kotikov.

I looked at him curiously. His disarming cherubic face was twisted. Obviously his stomach was on fire.

I nodded toward another Martini.

"Nyet!" he gasped.

Finally Even

HAPPILY, I steered the suffering Kotikov over to the table. I ran my hand through the gray hair he had given me. At last, we were even.

When I stepped off the boat in New York, I was asked the same questions that are being asked today, with even deeper concern: The Berlin airlift cost us close to half a billion dollars; was it worth the price? Was Berlin a noble experiment, to be written off as a cosly blunder or was it an invaluable testing ground?

Berlin was worth the price, for a rumber of reasons. The city was an invaluable testing ground, where the American people learned the real intent and meaning of communism.

From the viewpoint of a noble experiment, Berlin was a first-rate illustration of our desire to cooperate wholeheartedly with Soviet Russia in a peaceful world, and of our inability to [illegible] this desire.

Through a policy of appeasement, which is understandable now but nevertheless was wrong, we led Russia to the verge of war with the Western powers. By our generosity and self-effacement, we encouraged the Communists to think in terms of a victorious war against us, unwittingly misleading them as to our strength and determination.

As a proving ground, Berlin was without peer. There, before three-and-a-quarter million intelligent persons, living in a great modern city, the ideologies of East and West came into conflict.

Spotlight on Communism

THE spotlight of world attention was focused on communism and democracy in action, and as far as communism is concerned, no holds were barred.

The Russians employed the blockade in the hope of driving the Americans out of Berlin, causing our allies to desert us and making us lose face in Europe.

Their propaganda charge to Europe was that the United States was close to economic collapse and the American people were sufficiently decadent to sacrifice principle for immediate dollar gain.

Had the United States pulled out of Berlin under Russian pressure there would have been no room for us on the European Continent, and no Marshall Plan would have repaired the error, for who wants generosity from a coward?

The manner in which the Western powers forced Moscow to lift the siege prevented war. The Germans refused to be stampeded, and took heart from our stand.

Our food stocks gave us time to think, and the airlift showed that we were willing to fight for our rights. Great, peaceful air missions could be converted very easily into bombing missions.

This the Russians realized, and they felt themselves unprepared for the type of war that a nation like ours could wage against them. They admitted defeat.

As far as the Germans were concerned, smashing the blockade gave the people new hope. For years, over the radio and through the Soviet press, they had been told that communism was their only chance of salvation.

Lessons Learned

RUSSIA was contrasted with the United States in violent political attacks on our system. Had we fled from Berlin, the Germans would have surrendered to the Reds; there would have been no pinnacle of Western democracy and freedom to which they could raise their eyes. By staying and placing them in the position of allies we inspired determination to continue on the slow, difficult road to democracy.

Berlin also taught us lessons. First of all, the Berlin experience shattered the illusion that the Russians were our allies any longer, and convinced us that Soviet Russia and her Communist party stooges the world over are our enemies and represent death to everything we stand for.

I admit that this attitude is a sharp change from the admiration we felt for Russia during the war. The still smoldering embers of this admiration were fanned into our policy of appeasement after V-E Day.

I asked one very high American official why we had followed such a policy.

"By the fall of 1945," he replied, "I knew that our appraisal of Russia was wrong, and that Russia was our enemy—not our friend. Yet we would not have been justified in breaking our early engagements, or in accepting this appraisal as a fact so soon after Russia had suffered 20 million casualties fighting the same enemy we had fought."

The USSR today has millions of men under arms. The people are being deprived of the advantages of peace in order to mobilize industry for war.

By forced labor, they are worked night and day to increase the country's war potential, and a high percentage of scientific energy is being directed to the production of atomic bombs.

Proof of Intent

CERTAIN proof of the Russian intention to employ the bomb is provided by Andrei Y. Vishinsky, the Russian foreign minister and vociferous Soviet spokesman.

"If any power resorts to the use of the atom bomb in war, Soviet Russia is able to take care of herself," he says, and adds with his usual glibness—the glibness that covered so many broken promises in Berlin—"but we are utilizing atomic energy only for the requirements of peace and for the service of mankind."

These are the things we Americans, in our peace-loving hearts, like to hear. But, beware! This is the 1950 Soviet lullaby, meant to close our eyes to the big and fearful surprise the Russians are preparing for us.

THE END.

No Need to Coax

There is no reason or excuse . . . For coaxing anyone . . . To do a favor or a task . . . That really should be done . . . Because whenever any work . . . Is good and worth the while . . . It should be underaken with . . . A promise and a smile . . . We have a certain duty to . . . Our friend and fellowman . . . And we should show our willingness . . . To give the best we can . . . So why should anyone be urged . . . Entreated or implored . . . To do a deed for someone else . . . That brings its own reward? . . . The one who has to be cajoled . . . Is vain in all his ways . . . And he is principally concerned . . . About his share of praise.

Count the letters in your first name. Subtract four if the number is six or more. Add three if the number is less than six. Then you have the key number. Check each key number left to right. The letters under the checks form a message.

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

South Pacific May Rate As the Show of the Century Note

Last August, Gregory "Red" Eckholm of 3508 Minnesota ave. se., sent away for tickets to "South Pacific."

"My vacation falls between January 29 and February 12," he wrote. "Please send me the best seats you have available during those dates."

In September, Red got two tickets for a February performance. Third row mezzanine, they cost him a total of $9.60.

Last week Red and his missus were in the lobby of the New York Statler (nee "Pennsylvania") ready to leave for the theater.

A well-dressed woman who had just turned away from the Statler's ticket agency noticed the tickets in Red's hand.

"How in the world did you get them?" she asked. "I've been trying for months to get tickets to 'South Pacific'."

"We ordered them last August," explained Mrs. Eckholm, meantime taking due notice of the woman's $5000 mink coat.

"Aren't you lucky," sighed the New Yorker. "If you'd be willing to sell those tickets, I'd be glad to give you $100 for them."

Liz Eckholm blinked, but stood her ground. "No," she said, "I guess not."

Vacation over, the Eckholms are back in Washington. "How was the show?" I asked Red.

"Well," he answered, "for $9.60 it was terrific. But I don't think I could have enjoyed it as much if I'd have paid $100 for those tickets."

WELCOME BACK FROM VACATION, MR. KENEIPP

Mrs. Bernard H. Kroll of 306 Livingston ter. se. tells me there's great need for a traffic light at Atlantic ave. and S. Capitol st. se.

Ever since the new South Capitol Street Bridge has been open, traffic in that vicinity has been very heavy. It's hard for pedestrians to cross safely; especially old folks.

Traffic Director George Keneipp sighed when he heard the complaint.

"Eight wonderful days at Miami Beach," he muttered, "and you greet me with the same old routine on my first day back."

"No dough?" I asked.

"That's right," he replied. "That intersection is on our list, but I'm pretty sure we won't be able to get to it in this fiscal year. We don't have our 1951 appropriations for traffic lights yet, so I can't be sure—but if we get what I think we're going to get, this one will have to wait until the 1952 appropriation."

"But the lady says it's a bad spot," I protested.

"I know," said Keneipp. "But I'll show you a dozen that are worse. More traffic, and more accidents — so they get priority."

PERSONAL NOTES

Warder Family, Accokeek, Md.: Thanks for the Valentine. Just so you still get The Washington Post, you remain District Liners in good standing.

Philip W. Stafford, 1420 Van Buren st. nw.: The Transit Riders Association has just opened new offices at 2017 S st. nw. If you don't like Transit Radio, they'll be mighty pleased to hear from you. The phone number is Decatur 8000.

Mrs. Blossom B. Genderson, 5900 Utah ave. nw.: I don't think that one isolated incident should be taken as proof that the District's ambulance service is inadequate. However, there's no denying that the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad is right on the ball. They're a bunch of eager beavers who take great pride in their work and as a result are a tremendous asset to the entire community.

ADD SIGNS

On 18th st. nw., there's a window which bears the legend: "New Thought Center." Beneath it is a sign which says: "Vacancy."

TOO MUCH SALES TALK

Mrs. Albert Bruckhart Niess of 4604 Walsh st., Chevy Chase, Md., writes:

"Why are the commercials on my favorite soap operas so long? I get so weary waiting for the commercial to end that I go sound asleep and miss the rest of the program. Besides, I buy the soap anyhow."

Maybe the commercials aren't long, so much as they're dull, and seem long. There are some clever commercials on the air that are a joy to listen to.

On the other hand, maybe it's just the modern technique of beating the listener over the head with the same message, day after day.

It's hard to listen to, but it apparently sells merchandise —or they wouldn't continue to use it.

GOOD START

Howard Acton has practically completed a new song that can't miss making the Hit Parade. There's no music for it yet, and he hasn't exactly written the lyrics, either. But the title is a honey:

"Remember, Men; Bad Luck Is Better Than No Luck At All."

SILVER LINING

For each man there's a great romance;
In fortune's book her name's engraved.
And should you miss her by some chance,
Why then, you lucky dog— you're saved!

David Kandel
1216 New York ave. nw.

DEPT. OF UTTER NONSENSE

Andy F. Kisacky of 4806 Suitland rd. se. informs me that he's been gypped by a local jeweler. Andy bought a watch that was guaranteed waterproof, but later discovered there was a spring in it.

SUSIE Q.

"Yeah, you whisper sweet nothings in their ear . . . and they start shouting for hamburgers!"

Merry-Go-Round

'Fat Cats' Flocking to Democrats

By Drew Pearson

The big Democratic dinner in Washington tonight contrasts shartly with the Republican box supper 10 days ago. It will be the biggest banquet in the history of the world—even bigger than the banquet once given to Julius Caesar. If the Democrats are smart, however, the contrasts will be a red flag of warning.

Pearson

The Democratic dinner costs $100 a plate—not a bad idea to raise political money. But what's happening is that the fat cats who once backed up the Republicans now flock to the Democrats, for a very simple reason: The Democrats have power.

In other words, included among the guests tonight will be a few who have income-tax cases to fix, who want to get a Government contract, who seek to influence White House policy or are angling for an airline franchise. Two tables seating 10 guests each cost $2000—and sometimes the investment is worth it.

It used to be that the big-money boys flocked to the Republicans, but—except for the very faithful—a lot are now switching to the Democrats. This doesn't mean that they are really for Truman. They just think it pays.

But the danger to the Democrats is that when any party gets indebted to too many fat cats, it starts riding for a fall. Likewise, when the Republicans really draw support from the $1 box-supper class, it will start riding to victory. Only trouble with the recent GOP box supper was that it was superficial. The boys didn't really relish it.

Illustration of how Democratic dinners may be mixed with big business was the contribution of popular Bill Pawley, former Ambassador to Brazil, to the December 2 New York dinner. At that dinner, Pawley took four tables. Cost: $4000.

Pawley, a great friend of Bob Hannegan, made a big killing after the war when he bought surplus planes from the British in China, turned round and sold them to the Chinese. Since Pawley made the deal outside the U. S. A., it was tax free—so he raked in a handsome profit.

More recently, Pawley has been pulling wires to help the Nationalist Chinese to whom he sold these planes. A good Democrat, high in party councils, his expensive four tables at the Waldorf dinner may have had no business motive. And it should be noted in fairness that if Pawley tried to use political influence with Truman and Acheson re China, it didn't work.

When Charles Luckman, the deposed czar of Lever Brothers' soap empire, raps the gavel at the big Democratic dinner tonight, it will be a triumph for a roly-poly little man with a high-buttoned coat sitting in the audience.

He is public relations expert Ben Sonnenberg, who has achieved a public relations miracle by having two of its proteges chairman the two big Democratic dinners. In fact, it's got so that when the Democrats hold a dinner they figure on "menus by Oscar" and "chairmen by Sonnenberg."

The last New York dinner, which netted the Democrats more than $250,000, was presided over by earthy Tom Morgan, the North Carolina boy who rose to be head of Sperry Gyroscope and who, like Luckman, is a client of Sonnenberg's.

To understand how the amazing Sonnenberg was able to perform this miracle of putting his clients in front of the speakers' stand twice in a row, you have to understand the gentleman himself. And even his wife says that is difficult.

Coming to this country from Poland as a boy, Ben never has forgotten his humble beginnings, reminds his friends that his grandfather was a rabbi and his father a pushcart peddler.

Ben represents some of the biggest corporations in the country—Texas Oil, J. S. Bache of Wall Street, Remington-Rand, Philip Morris and Lever Brothers. But he has a heart of gold and never is too busy to help out the nonpaying little fellow.

Though he takes good care of his clients, he is brutally frank in talking about himself, and once explained his high stiff collar and tight-fitting coat this way: "I chose my clothes because I knew that wherever I went, people would say, 'Who in God's name is that?'

"I don't care what they say about me," adds Sonnenberg, "just so they remember me." It isn't the clothes that make the man, however. It's the fact that he delivers.
